STYLISH and DURABLE.

No more bills can be introduced into the legislature. We ought to be thankful for that.

The state agricultural experiment station has issued a bulletin on injurious insects in the state in 1896. A great many of the lumber boys, and others, have felt them.

Now it is the duty of the legislature to build an asylum on the site purchased by the state for that purpose at Anoka, if one is as badly needed as the Hasting's people asserted.

Gov. Clough's veto of the bill locating the insane asylum at Hastings when a site at Anoka had already been purchased and paid for, will be approved by every right-minded person who would not be personally benefitted by the change.

The single tax theory seems to be making rapid progress in public favor, judging from the published interviews in the city dailies with some of the most prominent men in the state. But these men don't hold any unimproved land for speculation, which makes a difference.

A re-apportionment bill will probably pass the legislature this session. Under the new scheme five new districts will be created with 60 senators and 120 representatives. Crow Wing and Morrison counties will comprise one district, with one senator and two representatives. This arrangement will be satisfactory to the people of this county.

Anoka ought to have the fourth insane asylum located there. But the papers of that city are adopting a mighty poor way of getting favors, or their just deserts, for that matter, by threatening to kill and slaughter politically all who oppose her wishes in the matter. No place was ever benefitted by such tactics, but a great many have been seriously injured.

A bill is now pending before the legislature known as "the local option taxation bill," which would give the people of any community the right to adopt the single tax theory for local taxation. Taxes, for local purposes only, would be raised by taxing lands only, all improvements being exempt, the theory of the single taxers being that if improvements were exempt, more money would be spent, in this way improving business and employing vastly more labor.

As to Personal Tax Delinquents.

S. F. 163 has been signed by the governor, and it is important that all clerks of court and sheriffs in the state know of its provisions at once. The bill relates to personal tax delinquencies and radically amends the old law. Under the old law, on April 1st of each year, the treasurer or auditor made out a statement showing the personal delinquents, and the clerk of court immediately issued citations against the delinquents, who were put to great inconvenience and hardship in many cases. The new law provides that the clerk shall not issue these citations, but that the delinquents shall have fifteen days from April 1st, during which they may file an answer and take the case into court if in their opinion the assessment is wrong, or from any other reason the tax should not be paid. The new law is directly in the interest of the poor tax payers.

Will Organize.

The Minneapolis Times of yesterday contains the following, which is the latest in regard to organization:

"Senator Whitney asked yesterday that H. F. 568 (The Cass and Beltrami organization bill) be taken from the table and referred to himself and Senator Potter for amendment. This was done without objection. It is understood that the friends and opponents of the bill have agreed on a compromise, and that the bill will be passed without opposition today. Senator Whitney, who represents the homesteaders, and Senator Potter, who stands for the lumbermen, agreed on a bill yesterday. It limits the county to a tax levy of $12,000 per annum for ten years to run the county government of Beltrami, and to 2 per cent for school purposes, and also limits the indebtedness. The homesteaders have agreed to these fiscal restrictions, and the lumber interests have withdrawn their opposition on the strength of these restrictions. F. J. Cline, who represents the pine land department of T. B. Walker's business, states that Mr. Walker is entirely pleased with this arrangement. He denies the report that Mr. Walker was opposed to the settlement of the county. All he wants is to prevent wild financial management and keep the county government down to a careful and business like system. It is understood that all opposition to the organization project is now past, and that the bill will pass by almost unanimous vote."

Since the above was put in type this morning, Judge Holland has received a telegram announcing that the bill had passed the senate.

The Wagon Bridge.

Contractor C. B. Rowley has had a force of men at work on the old wagon bridge since Monday morning, putting it in shape to use until a new structure can be built. They will finish today.

The matter of a new bridge has not yet been settled, but probably something definite will be decided on at the meeting of the commissioners on Tuesday. One thing ought to be impressed on the commissioner's minds, and that is that a new structure must be built, and it must be built of steel, so that it will not have to be repaired continually and renewed again in a few years. A wooden bridge is a poor investment at any cost. A good iron bridge will last indefinitely.

Notice to Water Consumers.

Water rents for the second quarter 1897, are due April 1st, AND MUST BE PAID ON OR BEFORE THE 10TH OF THE MONTH. The company is particularly desirous that the rentals for this quarter shall be paid promptly. The water will be shut off from all consumers who are in default after the 10th of the month.

Crow Wing the Best.

The committee appointed by the legislature to investigate the beet sugar industry has made its report which is very lenghty and complete. It finds the conditions in Minnesota excellent for beet raising, and submits reports of experiments made in 1890, in raising sugar beets, which places Crow Wing county at the head of the list in the quality of the beets raised as to the amount of sugar contained in the beets, and the purity. The Minneapolis Journal published the report complete, from which we clip the following extracts:

"At the present time there are negotiations under way between Philadelphia capitalists and the Great Northern, Northern Pacific and St. Paul & Duluth railways which, if successfully completed, will result in the establishment of four large beet sugar factories in this state, and there are numerous private parties who have signified a desire to enter upon the field which looks as promising.

"Some interesting calculations have been made by Professor Kaiser. He says that during the years from 1891 to 1895 inclusive the United States imported sugar and mollasses to the value of $540,000,000 exclusive of tariff charges. During the same period, in round numbers, our exports of wheat and flour amounted to $736,000,000. Add the duty charges to the former and it is almost as great as the latter.

"Professor Kaiser also estimates that the 1,500,000 people in Minnesota use annually 90,000,000 pounds of sugar, costing about $4,000,000, every cent of which goes out of the state. It needs no further argument to show the vastness of the market which awaits the coming industry.

"In order to give a fair idea of the value of the beet sugar industry it is necessary to quote a few figures. The total product of the beet sugar in the United States in 1895 was 30,000 tons; of cane sugar, 324,000 tons. Total domestic production, including maple and sorghum sugar, 377,000 tons. The total imports were 1,450,000 tons, valued at $110,000,000. The total consumption was 1,950,000 tons of 2,240 pounds. It can be seen by this that the United States consumes about 2,000,000 tons of sugar annually, and produces but 377,000 tons of sugar annually.

"The first beet sugar factory in America was built at Chatsworth, Ill., 1863. There are now eight factories located in five different states, and one other to be built in Wisconsin. These factories in 1895 turned out 60,000,000 pounds of sugar.

"The universal testimony of chemists, says the report, is that any good wheat land is suitable for beets, and it is, therefore, easy to see that they can be cultivated with great success in almost any portion of the state. Repeated analysis has shown that beets raised in the United States contain as great percentage of sugar as similar vegtables grown in Europe.

"D. A. Harper of the Minnesota experimental station after four years experiments in beet sugar cultivation in the state, says the results were reasonably satisfactory. The experiments of 1890 were so encouraging that seeds were imported from Germany, and distributed among 2,500 farmers in all parts of the state. The results are best stated in the following table;

"Result of experiments with sugar beet for the year 1890.

County.	Per Cent. Sugar.	Purity.
Chisago	13 1	80 5
Crow Wing	17 5	90 7
Dakota	15 2	88 9
Goodhue	14 9	80 0
Kandiyohi	16 9	85 0
Kittson	12 7	82 9
Lac-qui-parie	14 4	82 1
Meeker	15 6	85 3

"Twelve per cent is good enough for manufacturing purposes, and it will be seen that in no case above quoted did the percentage fall below that figure.

"The characteristics of the good sugar beet, briefly stated, are as follows:

"First—Its root must have the form, neither of a carrot nor of a tuber, but be shaped more like a Bartlett pear. It must be long and slender, gradually tapering and free from large lateral roots.

"Second—It must not grow above the surface of the ground.

"Third—It must have a smooth, white surface and the flesh be white and hard.

W. C. T. U.

The attendance at the W. C. T. U. parlor meeting on Tuesday last was not as large as could have been desired, as the walking was still very bad in places, keeping some at home who otherwise would have been there. The meeting was opened in the usual manner, and after a few interesting remarks by the leader, Mrs Barnes, Mrs. Veon read a sketch of the life and work of Neal Dow. Mrs. A. D. White read a sketch of his home life, and Mrs. Barnes read "The Battle Star of Maine," a poem written by Rev. Dwight Williams for Prohibition Rally Day, also other short selections. Frances Willard's account of the first time she met Neal Dow was read, and a few selections from "Postal Card Tributes" to the "Grand Old Man," from such people as Joseph Cook, Chas. F. Thwing, D. D., Helen M. Barker, Mary Lathbury, Wilbur F. Crafts, Bishop H. W. Warren, D. D., and many others. It was impossible to carry out the program as arranged on account of the absence of some who were to have taken part. However, we seldom have such a spring as this has been, so we are thankful for what we could do, and will hope for better things next year. The meeting closed with prayer and the Aaronic benediction. We were pleased to note the presence of one gentleman at the meeting. If more of our brothers, and particularly our honorary members, would show their interest in, and good will towards the work we are trying to do, by occasionally attending the meeting of the society, it would be a great encouragement to the members. We also noted the presence of a visiting member from the largest W. C. T. Union in Minnesota. It was very pleasing to be told by this visitor that our little Brainerd union was keeping up with the work in a very creditable manner as compared with the larger unions of the state.

W. C. T. U. PRESS REPORTER.

Saved by a Hatchet.

Golden Days tells a story of a prospector in Alaska who, in company with eight other men, was walking across a great icefield. At one place a thin sheet of ice hid from view a crack about 3 feet wide. The party approached the crevasse diagonally, the prospector in advance, when suddenly he and the next man in the line slipped through the thin coating of ice and disappeared in the chasm below. Their cries narrowly prevented some of the others from meeting a similar fate.

The second man carried a gun, and as he held on to it the weapon lodged crossways in the crevasse and enabled him to be rescued, but the prospector went down at least 75 feet and was tightly jammed between the walls of ice.

He could not be seen, but his voice could be distinctly heard directing the movements of his rescuers. Blankets were torn into strips and tied into a rope. This was lowered to the imprisoned man, who fastened one end around his body. When the rope was pulled, however, it was found that he was jammed in so tightly that he could not be moved without tearing him asunder.

The rescuers were in a quandary, but the imprisoned man suggested that they lower him a hatchet, and when this was done he chopped himself loose in short order. Altogether he was 30 minutes in the icy tomb, and it was a week before he recovered from the shock.

They Wouldn't Salute.

Black Jack Percival, who was a naval captain before the war, once brought a cargo of Spanish jacks home in a man-of-war. He was in Spanish waters when the jacks were given to the United States by Spain and was ordered to bring them out in his ship. It made him angry, but he got the beasts aboard and sailed for New York. When he came through the Narrows, the guns had been rolled back, and out of every port there stuck a jack's head. Thus decked out, and without a salute, he came to his anchorage. The admiral commanding sent post haste to demand why Captain Percival had not saluted. "I didn't salute," was the doughty captain's answer, "because I couldn't. I had two men twisting every jack's tail, but not a blanketed one of them would bray."—Chicago Chronicle.

A Cold Weather Idyl.

Tenderly, touchingly, he wrapped the damp, warm cloth about the injured member.

But no relief came.

"Maria," he shouted after a long, hopeless pause, "it's no use! These blamed hot rags won't do. Get me the hammer!"

And once again he rapped the pipe.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

There are still many immense cattle ranches in Texas, although in some parts of the state they have been contracted by increased settlement. The largest is one of 3,100,000 acres, the property of the Capital Freehold Land and Investment company.

The poet occasionally reaches the summit of art, hits upon a complete character, a burst of sublime passion, then he falls back, gropes amid qualified success, rough sketches, feeble imitations and at last takes refuge in the tricks of his trade.—Taine.

A few years ago Greece was only visited by archaeologists and students. General travel in this direction has but recently set in. Last year about 1,500 Americans visited Athens, and 42 citizens of the United States resided there for the winter.

There are now about 7,500 south sea islanders, called Kanakas, engaged in labor in the sugar industry in Queensland. They are, as a whole, an excellent class of laborers.

THE SCHOONER.

It Was Invented at Gloucester by a Builder of Fishing Vessels.

The schooner was invented at Gloucester by a builder of fishing vessels. History records that "Captain Robinson built and rigged a ketch, as they were then called, masted and rigged it in a peculiar manner; when launched, the peculiar motion she made as she glided into the water from the stocks caused one of the bystanders to exclaim, 'Oh, how she scoons!' Robinson instantly dashed a bottle of rum against her bow and exclaimed, 'A scooner let her be!' And thus the schooner originated." This event happened in 1713, and three years later mention is made of the employment of a "scooner" in the fisheries off Cape Sable, Nova Scotia.

The invention of the schooner was an important event to the New England fisheries, for its rig has been found, after nearly two centuries of trial, well adapted to fishing vessels employed in the western Atlantic. It has been materially improved, however, since its adoption, and the lofty, yachtlike fishing clipper of today bears little resemblance to its ancient prototype, even though the rig remains the same in principle.

Immediately after the Revolutionary war the adoption of the "Chebacco boat" became quite general, especially along the north shore of Massachusetts. These diminutive craft, at first ranging from about five to ten tons, derived their specific name from Chebacco, now a part of the town of Essex, Mass., where they originated. Cat rigged, with two masts, they were "handy" boats and became so popular that they could be met with on almost all of the inshore grounds. In later years, when some were as large as from 15 to 20 tons, they grew more venturesome, and their cruises extended to the offshore banks.

Indeed tradition tells of some going as far as the West Indies during the embargo period, carrying out cargoes of fish and returning with rum, sugar or molasses. The difficulty of intercourse at that time often made these ventures profitable, and apparently less risk was taken in these diminutive vessels than in larger craft.

As early as 1820 the pinky began to supersede the Chebacco boat. This was similar in form to the latter, being a sharp sterned craft, but it was larger and carried a bowsprit and jib, thus having a full schooner rig. It was most generally in use north of Cape Cod until about 1840. In the meantime square stern schooners, usually with low quarter decks—thus distinguished from the old fashioned high quarter deck craft of the Marblehead type—were built, and for some years after the last mentioned date they were generally preferred to all others. Prosperity led to continued improvement, and about the middle of the century a material change was made in the introduction of the modern clipper schooners.—Joseph William Collins in Harper's Magazine.

A Feat of Memory.

The geographer Maretus narrates an instance of memory probably unequaled. He actually witnessed the feat and had it attested by four Venetian nobles. He met in Padua a young Corsican who had so powerful a memory that he could repeat as many as 36,000 words read over to him only once. Maretus, desiring to test this extraordinary youth in the presence of his friends, read over to him an almost interminable list of words strung together anyhow, in every language and some mere gibberish. The audience was exhausted before the list—which had been written down for the sake of accuracy—was completed, and at the end of it the young Corsican smilingly began and repeated the entire list without a break and without a mistake. Then to show his remarkable power he went over it backward, then every alternate word, first, third and fifth, and so on, until his hearers were thoroughly exhausted and had no hesitation in certifying that the memory of this individual was without a rival in the world, ancient or modern.—Household Words.

MAN'S LITTLE VANITIES.

How Carefully He Looks to the Crease In His Trousers.

"Does masculine self unconsciousness exist?" asks a writer in the Philadelphia Inquirer. I am inclined to think, after weighing well man's many character traits, that this one at least forms no part of his mental make up.

He is such a conscious creature if ever once he imagines he is being observed. Only an outsider's glance is needed to rivet his attention upon his adorable self.

Sometimes it is the most innocent glance, one, if he did but know it, that has not taken him in at all, but as it happened to fall his way it is gobbled up by his vanity, and immediately the woman who has unfortunately bestowed the glance is viewed in the light of a possible conquest.

A man never seems to have grown too old or too ugly to arrogate to himself admiration that a woman in her palmiest days would hardly dare claim.

That crease in his trousers weighs so heavily upon his mind. He is never, I can see, perfectly assured of its perfection unless the trousers are just home from the tailor.

Imagine a woman getting into a street car and hardly settling herself before she begins pulling at a seam in her gown!

How tenderly he hitches it into correct position! He doesn't mind in the least showing his ankles, and a man's ankles—ye gods, what sights to see, even the best dressed pair going!

Surely it must be that vanity prompts him to show them, or indifference, which amounts to the same thing. I often wonder why a sight of his brother's does not warn him to keep his own well covered.

In all matters pertaining to his toilet he is equally assured. I don't suppose 100 horsepower could drag him to certain places without a dress suit. He would think it a much greater crime to rob a bank than wear a last year's tile.

He talks a good deal about comfortable shoes, but I notice he falls right into line with the latest shoe fad regardless of price or comfort.

As for collars and neckties, no bud just beginning to get a taste of fine clothes ever fussed over them as a man does over these two items of wearing apparel. He hasn't a bit of conscience about pitching a drawerful of collars into the ash barrel if he happens to get a notion that they are a little "off cut," and, as for ties, he watches after their modes with lynx eyes.

He hears that the scarfpin must go a little to the right or a little to the left, and it is changed without delay. Watch charms are out of date. Every trinket of the sort he owns is promptly abandoned. He wears only the kind of waistcoat other men wear.

Man's dress vanities! Why, they are legion, and he cultivates them with an insistence worthy of a better cause.—Boston Herald.

Paper Handkerchiefs.

The story of the heathen Chinee and the missionary's fancy handkerchief should be oft repeated. The Chinaman admired the dainty square of embroidered linen very much, until he was told its use, and that it would be washed and used again, when he dropped it with disdain. To his mind, the idea of using a handkerchief again and again was inconceivable.

When we look at it as a matter of hygiene, to burn up all soiled handkerchiefs is certainly the safest, cleanest course. There can be no question as to the advantages of this plan. Any slight cold may prove to be the grip.

No doubt many a case of consumption has been unsuspected until whole households have been subjected to risks which science has taught us to avoid.

If we are still unwilling to use the Chinese paper handkerchiefs in public—always and everywhere a handkerchief should be as little in evidence as possible—we can, at least, use them in the privacy of home. Pure white squares of Chinese paper, suitable for this purpose, may be purchased for 20 cents a hundred. Already some sensible people keep them on hand to use when suffering from colds.—F. W. in Philadelphia Ledger.

Gordon's Comment.

On a recent visit to Boston, General John B. Gordon, the ex-Confederate, was entertained by a well known lawyer, who showed him the sights. One of the places the southerners visited was the cyclorama of the battle of Gettysburg. The old soldier did not make any comment on it. When the two came out of the building and were on their way down town, the lawyer inquired:

"Well, general, what did you think of it?"

"What did I think of it!" said the general, coming to a standstill and striking a defiant attitude. "Let them paint Bull Run!"—San Francisco Argonaut.

The Horrid Record a Traveler Brings Home From Central Africa.

We are getting to be better acquainted with that repulsive habit, man eating, and Sidney Langford Hinde, in his "The Fall of the Kongo Arabs," published in London by Mathuen, writes that in central Africa cannibalism is growing and extending to tribes that formerly were free from the taint. Miss Kingsley in her recent book tells us of her visit to a country of cannibals.

As commanding a force in the service of the Free State it was the business of the author to prevent the raids of the Kongo Arabs. The Arabs, it is represented, were good fighters, but when beaten fled precipitately, fearful of being eaten by the followers of the Belgian train. It is one of the beliefs of Mussulmans that a mutilated body cannot enter heaven. So cannibalism, or the dread of it, had its effects on these slave dealing Arabs.

The Bangala people cannot have a single idea of humanity. They have the cruel habit of maiming the animal they want to eat, believing that when it lingers half alive its flesh will become tender. Though there was an abundance of hippopotami, the cannibals preferred human flesh, and they dealt in it.

An instance is presented of a sentry in the employ of the white forces who, under instruction, fired at a supposed enemy. The shot was fatal, and the man fell. The man killed proved to be the father of the sentry, and the son thought it was "hard lines" since he was unable to eat him.

"The commandant ordered him to bury the body properly, but discovered afterward that, though the man would not eat the body himself, he had given it to his friends to eat. That same week a young Basongo chief came to the commandant while at his dinner in his tent and asked for the loan of his knife, which, without thinking, the commandant lent him. He immediately disappeared behind the tent and cut the throat of a little girl slave belonging to him and was in the act of cooking her when one of our soldiers saw him and reported what he was doing. This cannibal was put in irons, but some two months later I found him in such a wretched condition that, fearing he would die, I took him out of the chains and gave him his liberty with a warning. Scarcely a fortnight had passed when he was brought in by some of our Hausa soldiers, who said that he was eating the children in and about our cantonments."

There was no hesitancy on the part of the natives as to their cannibalistic tendencies. They would say to the whites, "Give us that man; he is a lazy fellow, and you will never get any good out of him, so you may as well give him to us to eat."

Slavery was to some of the natives rather a desirable condition. They reasoned it out to Captain Hinde in this way: "If I am free and don't get work, who is going to feed me? Whereas, if I have a master, he has to find me work, and when there is no work he has still to feed me."

Captain Hinde's story of the pygmies presents no novel points. If physically they are much below the average height of man, the little fellows make up for their deficiencies by cunning. They use weapons tipped with poison and, with their tiny bows and arrows, are remarkably quick and handy.

Once on a visit to N'Gandu, the capital of Gongo Sutete, who was at one time Tippoo Tib's lieutenant, Captain Hinde saw a horrid thing—an execution.

"The man is immediately torn to pieces and disappears as quickly as a hare is broken up by a pack of hounds. Every man lays hold of him at once with one hand and with the other whips off the piece with his knife."

The Winter Soft Crab.

The winter soft crab differs from its summer cousin only slightly in appearance, being a little narrower in the body. It is, however, more succulent and finer flavored than the choicest specimen of the other kind, a fact that is well known to epicures. Moreover, being a rock crab, or, as it is called here, a sand crab, it differs in its habits from the other, which lives in the mud, and this difference has much to do with its comparative scarcity in ordinary seasons. It is much harder to find, unless the hunter has sharp eyes and a good knowledge of its ways, and it chooses its hiding places and its time of shedding with a wisdom too great for reason and attributable only to instinct.

In his will Peter the Great points out the course to be pursued by his successors for the extension of the Russian empire and the subjugation of Europe. In clause 9 he says: "Do all in your power to approach closely Constantinople and India. Remember that he who rules over these countries is the real sovereign of the world."

A Famous London Boxing Club.

The most interesting place of amusement for men is the National Sporting club. Every Monday night during the winter the sports of London meet there in the same building that Colonel Newcome and his son once left because they objected to Captain Costigan's song. The colonel would be more amused there now, for well trained and scientific boxers from all the world meet in a roped in square, surrounded by an orderly crowd of stockbrokers, bankers and miscellaneous sporting characters, who wait for the best man to win. Then they adjourn to a front room, and around the bar and little tables they talk about bygone fights and the men and horses whose pictures cover the wall. Some find their way to the Strand, where, in a supper room called Marble Halls, every variety of sport in all stages of luck and actors from the neighboring theaters discuss the fight of the evening round by round.—From "London as Seen by C. B. Gibson" in Scribner's.

No Duplicity Here.

The story is told of an English and an Irish trooper who were scouting against the Matabele in South Africa. A band of savages suddenly burst from behind some rocks and started for the men. They jumped upon their horses and fled over the rough country, but the Irishman kept falling to the rear of his companion.

"Confound you, Mike!" exclaimed the Englishman. "Ride, ride for your life! You'll be caught!"

"Go 'long wid you!" replied the Irish trooper, who was doing his best. "Do you think I'm throwin the race?"—Harper's Round Table.

Modest.

BRAINERD, - MINNESOTA

People of splendid appearance celebrate their acquaintance.

It is intimated that Lezow will not be chary about sitting down on the rattan trust.

As tie is used in making the new gold, let us hope that the old tie can problem is now solved.

An evangelist named Pepper is converting many sinners in Missouri. His sermons are said to be "hot stuff."

In Boston it is considered quite out of the common for a man to shut up his store on the day of his mother's funeral.

Electricity is the most shocking discovery yet made. It will shock the most brazen-faced men or women in the dark.

If this thing keeps up, a state of belligerency will have to be proclaimed between the American correspondents now in Cuba.

With a full-fledged king on its staff, that New York paper may manage to get along without a tyrant. Tweasy lies the head that wears a crown.

Never bear more than one kind of trouble at a time. Some people bear three kinds all they have had, all they have now, and all they expect to have.

An Oregon pioneer has sent Major McKinley a tomahawk, but the major will not need it in his business during the next four years. No kind of hawks are needed.

A Tennessee woman wants to legislate the collar button out of existence. That's the trouble with the collar button. It's already non-existent nine times out of ten when you want it.

From the manner in which Mr. Lezow tackles the tobacco trust it is evident he thinks that where there is so much smoke there must be some fire. He also intimates there is a good deal of water.

A member of the South Carolina legislature proposes to wear a pea jacket instead of labor by imposing a tax upon washerwomen. It is a scrubby sort of a statesman who would favor a law of that kind.

An Eastern exchange says a scientist has discovered that the earth will be dead in three hundred millions of years from now. Whether it will be totally annihilated or just dead, like David B. Hill, is not stated.

With a delicacy of expression that almost entitles the man to a full realization of his wish, a veteran of the Civil War, who was wounded while running away from a Confederate force, declares that he believes himself entitled to a pension because he received his hurt "while marching rapidly in front of the enemy."

A smile is as cheap as a frown, and has occasionally turned out to be worth vastly more in hard cash. Recent cable advices represent that a young bachelor leaving all his property to a young lady known to him only from the fact of living opposite, became happy several years she had smiled pleasantly upon him when they casually met in the street and the smile had cheered his lonely heart and won this practical recognition in his will.

It is certainly grievous that the New York man who for three years has washed the dishes, cleaned the house and taken care of the children while his wife worked out to gain the necessary double supplies should not be allowed a day or a night off now and then. His rebellion is surely justifiable. The exacting nature of the new woman is plainly in evidence in this case. It is easy to see what we may come to when woman shall have obtained complete mastery in all things.

Giving employment rather than alms is an idea that is making progress in New York large work rooms have been opened where women can be employed at tasks requiring little skill, and similar work is provided for men at the "Wayfarers' lodge." Orders for tickets have been prepared to be sold at the rate of $3 for 12, or $5 for 25 tickets, each ticket entitling the bearer to a day's work, a hot lunch and about 50 cents' worth of groceries and supplies to be taken home at night. There is so much work that ought to be done that there should never be lack of employment anywhere. Until our civilization shall have so far progressed that no willing hands shall be idle, we shall have little reason to boast of our moral advancement.

Congressman Sprague of Massachusetts needed nine large cars to take his domestic appurtenances to Washington. In one car was the cooking stove; another contained the splendid horses and their groom, which fed at the same hour and in company; a third held carriages; a fourth harness and saddles, and the rest various articles for the use of the family and the congressman. Some of the Massachusetts papers are criticising this wealthy representative's extravagance, but they have between such a man and Daniel Webster.

A commercial item from Missouri seems to indicate that the wife of the downtrodden farmer can hold her own with plutocratic peddlers. Although the peddler in question was a woman, Mrs. William Artman: Gentry Halsey, the village of trade, and incidentally to dispose of a tin bucket or so, cheated the woman out of 3 cents on a dozen and 17 cents on a calf skin, she makes no mean, but calmly works off two dozen stale eggs on him at 15 cents a dozen, and stuffs three pounds of best feathers and an old boot in a bag of geese feathers she sells to him at 25 cents a pound.

Circumstantial evidence has received another body blow. Bud Lindsay served twenty-one years in the Virginia penitentiary (and then died) for the murder of Joseph Murdock, and a few days since Murdock turned up, hale and hearty.

The peculiar defect in the human making discovered by a Chicago woman which she calls the "negative ear" is said to be especially marked in photographers and is not absent in a number of people who listen to appeals for charity.

It appears that so far as we know there are quite a number of society women in Atlanta who were not sweet on Forger Hale to the extent of wedding him warm letters. It is only fair to say, however, that the returns are not all in yet.

Senator Brandt of New York has introduced a bill in the legislature providing for the teaching of military tactics in the public schools. We are very much afraid that people with the proper martial ardor will not take to the idea.

THE LEGISLATURE.

The Grind of the Minnesota Law Mill.

St. Paul, March 24. — The Reeves mining tax bill yesterday afternoon passed the house by a vote of 62 to 45. The debate was attended by an interest somewhat sensational, and it will be long before the people of the lobby in opposition to the bill concluded that it was inexpedient to the passage of the bill.

Mr. Johnson of Freeborn county, who voted for the house, in explaining his vote, that he had been corrupted by the lobbyists and offered to vote against the bill. "I had been opposed to the bill more than," said Mr. Johnson, "but I changed front from that time.

Mr. Johnson's statement was received with applause, and doubtless it will be long before lobbyists have enough votes to carry the bill. Mr. Lloyd said that he had been asked to oppose the bill, but would vote for it on account of the methods of the lobby. A long debate followed the vote by which the bill was passed.

The bill is intended to tax levy for the appropriation for the state university was passed.

The following bills were passed:

Amending the law relative to the construction of railroads crossing and giving a property owner the right to compel the construction of a crossing and the right of way of a railroad and collect from the railroad the cost of construction of the fence; to legalize the defective organization of certain school districts; to amend the game law and providing for forest planting upon abandoned lands; providing for the orderly assembly of workingmen should not be conspiracy or intimidation; to provide for the survey of boundary lines of counties; amending the mineral lease law; requiring the lessee to file with the sale of land on execution; requiring the commissioner of the state to transfer books; amending the law relative to forfeiture of state lands; allowing cities to issue dock sites; exempting immigration companies from the operation of the bulk sales law; providing for fraud of assignees and receivers.

The following bills were introduced:

To amend the constitution so as to enable the legislature to alter or abolition to reduce taxation upon improved real estate; to provide for taxing improved real estate; to provide for licensing immigrant agents; relating to duties of county surveyors with respect to drainage outlets; to compel railroad companies to erect suitable signal posts and lights at all its grade crossings; to repeal a law relating to public bills.

St. Paul, March 24. — Another parliamentary battle in the Hastings-Anoka insane hospital contest was brought to a close yesterday on the floor of the senate chamber, and as heretofore, the committee has taken the side of the legislature, Hastings won. The contest arose over the proposition to change the majority report of the committee on hospitals for the insane and adopted the report of the minority, the bill to authorize the state to acquire a site and lease it to Hastings for an insane hospital for the insane. The senate adopted the report of the majority of the committee by a vote of 35 to 31 after a long discussion, and the bill to lease the Hastings site was then passed unanimously.

The following bills were passed:

Providing for taxation for educational purposes; to provide for the extension of the work of the experiment station and to appropriate money therefor; to authorize corporations having a population of not more than 3,000 inhabitants to issue bonds to pay the funding indebtedness thereof; providing for the recording in the office of the register of deeds of orders, decrees and judgments of courts of competent jurisdiction to real estate or any interest therein and prescribing the effect of such record; to regulate conveyances made by husband and wife by separate deeds of the same and others.

St. Paul March 25. The house passed yesterday what promised to be the most long-drawn legislation of particular importance to the state, and it was not without considerable difficulty that this bill was passed. The house passed over a bill offered by Mr. McDonald and is designed to throw a greater degree of protection upon the farmers and stockholders of state banks. The bill was passed by a vote of 83 to 3.

A large number of bills were reported from the various committees.

The following bills were passed:

To provide for the right of state to enter into a contract with Frank P. Dufresne for the publication of the laws of the state; relative to the time of holding general terms of the district courts in the 10th judicial district; providing for the enforcement of liability against the stockholders of mining corporations; regulating mining corporations; regulating the sale of alum baking powder; relating to narrow gauge railroads; relating to banks of discount and deposit.

The Senate.

Senator Hingtgen moved and seconded the consideration of the new military code bill which had been reported back from the table and placed on general orders for further consideration.

The bill to take away from Olmsted county the special appropriation of $2,000 for the Geneva Lake improvement fund was defeated.

The following bills were passed:

To provide for incorporation and regulation of a telephone system; to amend the law relating to the assessment life and casualty insurance associations; relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors and advertisement; to amend an act to regulate elections; relative to the time for holding the first stock societies and appropriations for the support of the university; to allow counties in cities having no more than 50,000 and not less than 25,000 inhabitants to issue bonds; to authorize the making of agreements on behalf of counties, cities, towns, villages, etc.; to regulate fares on sleeping, drawing and parlor cars; prescribing the duties of the state board of public lands; to amend the laws in relation to savings banks.

The following bills were introduced:

To reorganize and regulate the national guard; to provide for the time and hours for opening and closing polls at township elections; to amend the law relating to the adoption of children; to amend the law authorizing cities and villages to issue bonds for sewers; to legalize bonds issued under chapter 79, Laws of 1893; to amend the laws relating to village depositories; to protect the record evidence of title in certain land lands.

St. Paul, March 26.—Senator Theden's anti-department store bill was quite thoroughly discussed in the senate yesterday in committee of the whole. In moving the advancement of the bill from the table, Senator Theden, author of the measure, was heard. He said that the man who is allowed to sell two lines of goods enjoys a much greater privilege than the man who sells one, and that the value of the privilege increases with the number of classes carried. "Therefore," said Senator Theden, "I believe that it is no more than fair that the person who enjoys the greatest privilege should pay the most taxes."

The bill was referred to a special committee for amendment.

The following bills were passed:

To provide and acquire a site for the fourth state hospital for insane, and to revoke certain powers heretofore conferred under the law of 1893, in the location for a site of said hospital and to appropriate money therefor; to relieve school district treasurers and to provide for the payment of money in case a bank fails in which funds are deposited; to fix a time for holding terms of the district court in Mille Lacs county.

The bill to provide for the organization of unorganized counties was defeated.

The following bills were introduced:

To amend article 4 of the state constitution by striking out section 36; relative to the time for holding the first annual meeting of the state board of examining persons having contagious diseases; to provide for the government of cities of more than 50,000 inhabitants; to amend the laws relating to the jurisdiction of foreign companies to create a naval militia.

The House.

Mr. West's "Australian ballot" bill was taken up in the house. Mr. Meyers pending an amendment to the bill offered. The bill was finally recommended to pass. The bill provides for the formation of a blanket ballot. The tickets of the various parties appear in a row, the tickets of each party headed by the name of the party and the list of candidates nominated by the party. There is a circle at the head of each column. The voter votes for a party within this circle the voter votes that ticket straight. If he makes such a mark and then votes for one or more candidates on another ticket he may do so by placing a cross opposite the name of such candidates, and his ticket is counted otherwise as a straight ticket.

The following bills were passed:

To provide for the government of cities of more than 50,000 inhabitants; making appropriations for the expense of a jury in a civil action a sufficient verdict; legalizing certain bonds issued by the city of Crookston to cure defects in the plat of the village of Erskine; authorizing the commissioner of public lands; making cities organized out of the territory of the Red Lake and Leech lakes, to cover the cost of the city of Red Lake Falls; providing for the government of the permanent school and university fund to counties, cities, villages and school districts; to provide the national flag to be displayed at public places in registration and general election days.

The following bills were introduced:

To provide for the payment of employes; to provide for a gross earnings tax on railroad companies; to provide for the protection of the health of women and children employed in the manufacture employed in factories or mercantile establishments; to encourage the development of the state of the swamp lands known as open or muskeg lands; to provide for the sale of the reserve; for the creation of corporations to operate crematories; to amend the probate code relative to the posting of notices by health officers upon houses where persons are suffering from smallpox or other infectious or contagious diseases; to organize the medical corps of the national guard; the "trivolty" general; to direct to the proper state the return of certain fees paid by candidates for placing names on the ballot.

St. Paul, March 27.—Senator Whitney succeeded in having the senate adopt a resolution to reconsider the vote whereby the senate had passed the bill to authorize the state to acquire a site and lease it to Hastings for an insane hospital for the insane. The senate adopted the report of the majority of the committee on the bill, by a vote of 35 to 31 after a long discussion, and the bill to lease the Hastings site was then unanimously passed.

Through the Left Breast.

Maj. Carland Contends That Life Was Not Worth Living.

Deadwood, S. D., March 29.—Maj. M. Carland, son of John E. Carland, judge of the United States court for the Eighth district of South Dakota, attempted suicide here by shooting himself through the left breast with a revolver. The ball passed through the upper part of the left lung, lodging just beneath the shoulder blade. The injury will not necessarily result fatally. Carland is a young lawyer and came here from Sioux Falls five weeks ago to enter the employ of the Homestake mining company. He says his cousin, Judge Carland, kept him out of the position because of some trouble entertained against him, and he has been here without money or means of support. He has threatened several times during the last week to take his life unless he can cured work or received money from home, and his parents, who live in Cheyenne, Mich., were notified, but regarded his threats idly. He entered a hardware store, and while examining a revolver, with the pretention of buying it, shot himself.

Maj. White Dead.

Injuries Received in a Fall Prove Fatal.

St. Paul, March 29.—Maj. George G. White, United States army, retired, and founder of the Loyal Legion in the Northwest, is dead at his residence here. Death came while he was the grief of his former military brethren, of his friends in the city and of the honorable order that acknowledged his leadership. For his taking of the injuries received, which proved fatal, he fell on the icy street at Seven Corners. His right leg had been shot away in battle so he was unable to protect himself when he fell face first upon the pavement. A serious injury was thus received by internal hemorrhage which resulted through chronic liver malady contracted in the service. He died at a reunion of the war dile at last through a combination of disabilities incurred in his devotion to his country's cause.

WEIGHTY WORDS FOR Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Phew!

It happened at a volunteer shooting match, and Blank and I were almost neck and neck for the first prize. He was one bull's-eye ahead of me, and my only chance was to make a draw of it. I was a better shot than Blank, but he had made a couple of flukes, while I had made one bad miss.

He got ready to fire his last shot, and I could tell by the smirk on his face that he didn't mean to miss. I crouched down behind a furze bush, and, raising my rifle, waited until he pulled the trigger.

Just as I saw the puff of smoke dart from his gun I glanced down the barrel of my rifle, fired, and struck Blank's bullet before it reached the target, knocking it aside. No one noticed me, and when the flag went up and showed a miss, didn't my rival tear his hair! Then I calmly made a bull's-eye and shared the stakes.—Answers.

The Cowboy of the Boulevard.

In the far West the cowboy rides his horse right up the steps of the hotel and into the barroom. In the far East the cowboy of the boulevard rides his wheel across the gutter and up over the curbstone and across the sidewalk, and up a step right into the bicycle store. It isn't so difficult as it looks when one has got the knack of it. The rider sits back and lifts his front wheel to the new level, and the rest is comparatively simple; but it interests the passers-by always to see a bicyclist ride right up into the store before he dismounts.—New York Sun.

LARIATING A LION.

John W. Owen Used Only a Good Rope in a Very Dangerous Capture.

The traffic in guns and ammunition at this point is likely to suffer a depression if the methods of John W. Owen in hunting wild animals are adopted generally. The other day Mr. Owen and Oliver Peaker were in the Jicarilla mountains, having several hunting dogs with them, but no guns. Besides capturing two wild cats and one fox, their hounds got on the fresh trail of a huge mountain lion, which had just gorged itself with the fresh veal from a calf he had killed. The lion had taken refuge from its pursuers in a tree, when Owen and Peaker came up and drove it off its perch with clubs. This was repeated until it reached its third resort. Here Mr. Owen, being an expert cow man, and realizing that a few dogs and two unarmed men could not hope to capture an animal of this character by means of noise and only stones and clubs for weapons, concluded to adopt the rope, which he knew so well how to use. Taking his lariat in his hand, he ascended the tree to within about six feet of the lion, and, making the throw with care and precision, the animal was caught around the neck just as he was ready for a spring at his captor. Mr. Owen dropped to the ground, the lion springing at the same time. When only two or three feet from the ground the animal reached the extent of the rope, which remained over the limb, with the other end fastened below, and was strangled to death.

The lion was one of the largest ever captured in this region, measuring 9 feet 4 inches from tip to tip, and weighing about 300 pounds.

Mr. Owen says he did not realize that he was in any danger until he had skinned the lion and mounted his horse to ride to camp, when his nerves relaxed and he became frightened.—White Caps (N. M.) Eagle.

"Here is a horrible story in the paper about a woman who put arsenic in her husband's coffee," said Mr. Lushforth, who was, just at that time, in the sentimental stage of his daily inebriation. "You wouldn't serve your poor hubby such a trick as that, would you, dear?"

"Of course not," said Mrs. Lushforth; "if I wanted to poison you, I would put it in your beer, where you would be sure to get it."—Indianapolis Journal.

Sickness Followed Exposure.

The Dangers Experienced in These Days of Civilization, From Inclement Weather.

The Indian Ignored the Elements.

How the Indian's Health and Long Life, May be Possessed by the White Man, Regardless of Climate.

A sudden change in temperature, a drenching, a forced exposure to extreme cold or to extreme heat, is apt to break down a system already weakened and about to succumb to disease, so that a severe, if not a fatal illness, may be quickly developed. By all who are suffering from a deranged condition of the liver the kidneys and the stomach, or from impurities of the blood, the greatest care should be exercised as to such exposure, or what is better care should be taken to make these organs well. It is in your power to do this. Do as the Indian did. Rely on Nature's own remedies. Keep the great life centres of the body well and the blood pure, and like the Indian you will be able to stand weather that is hot or cold, wet or dry. Mr. John H. Arms of 1134 Bryant Ave., Minneapolis, Minn., writes to the Kickapoo Indian Medicine Co. as follows:—"Last week I was caught out in a shower and thoroughly wet. This resulted in pains in my head, accompanied with a very disagreeable dizzy sensation. I tried Kickapoo Indian Remedies, bathing my head with Kickapoo Indian Oil, and getting immediate relief from my pain. Also took Kickapoo Indian Sagwa. Before I had taken a bottle I was again a well man, and feel that it saved me from a fit of sickness. We have used these remedies in our house ever since, and I cannot commend them too highly. My wife was in very poor health after suffering from the grip. Sagwa dispelled the disagreeable effects of this dangerous disease. She is now enjoying her usual good health." If others would not wait until too late, but take Kickapoo Indian Remedies at the first premonition of disease, not only would continued good health be theirs, but they could enjoy the long life which has made the Indian famous. Kickapoo Indian Sagwa can be bought at all druggists for $1 a bottle, as can all the other remedies, at prices equally reasonable. These medicines are harmless, although powerful in their effect, as they contain no poisonous ingredient of any description.

FATTY'S FAVORITE.

THOSE of us who go racing (either for a living or to be lively) hear a large number of good stories during our travels, and laugh at them in proportion to their merit and piquancy. Few can be retold indiscriminately. As a rule, they are libelous or demoralizing—or both. It is not prudent to retail them in the family circle before vistors of more or less strong religious convictions.

Happily, the story of "Fatty's" favorite may be told without fear of bringing a blush to the cheek of the youngest or most foolish person.

"Who is he?" was the question people asked in wonder, as they and he went on the course probably with a common purpose (to "get a bit," as the mission is called by those who follow it); and the reply was invariably the same, "Fatty."

That was was all. "Fatty," pure and simple; this seemed to satisfy public curiosity. Further interrogation was considered adventurous, in view of the startling facts it might reveal. To look at him was enough, especially when he was backing losers.

Truly, "Fatty" was a remarkable character, unconventional in his life and customs, also in his ideas as to the rights of individuals, so far as personal property was concerned. What he wished to have he thought he was entitled to take, if the owner's attention was diverted; and no man was cleverer than he in diverting owners' attention when there was anything to be taken by doing so.

Not a person of high principle, he could afford to purchase the luxuries of the season in sufficient abundance to gratify his appetite, which was immense. To many persons of the highest principle such luxuries are unknown.

When in his best form "Fatty" accomplished notable feats. His favorite maneuvers were executed on the race course. He was quite at home there, and moved about, both in the ring and paddock, with immunity from assault.

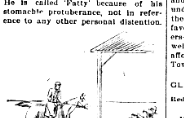
A friend told me this story about "Fatty" in confidence—hence I pass it on in the same spirit. We were returning from Camptown steeplechases after a bad day, and were bemoaning our anaemic condition.

"This is no game," I remarked, "for honest, well-meaning men;" and I vainly hunted for the remnants of a cheap cigaret which I hoped had not been thrown away in better times.

"Yes, it's a poor game," said my companion, "when one loses one's money in order to maintain one's rectitude of purpose. Now look at 'Fatty,'" he added, after a pause, rather inconsequentially; "you never hear him complain of his bad luck. It is those who have been playing with him who lift up their voices. He knows very well that luck wouldn't keep him in grease for his moustache and boots."

"But some of us are afraid of prison," I murmured regretfully.

"Well, just listen to a short account of what 'Fatty' did the other day, and then talk about prisons if you like. Of course, you know that at one time he kept a small coffee shop in the east end of London, and now bets in thousands. That denotes the master mind. He is called 'Fatty' because of his stomachic protuberance, not in reference to any other personal distention.



RODE A FINISH.

He looks at you, as it were, from behind a flour-bag, especially when wearing a white waistcoat, and he talks to you as though he would fall backwards if you pushed against it. O, yes! he's very hot, is 'Fatty.' He's had his ups and downs, and has always faced the music bravely, whether he'd a shirt on his back or a scarf round his neck. He's made money, too, by backing 'em on the course."

From personal experience I knew that was true, and I could not help reflecting that a man must be clever to make money at a sport by which most of us lose our little all and what we are able to borrow. Yet such a man is, no doubt, more than clever; he does not mind what he does.

My idea is that the wealthy punters are those who, if they cannot find winners, find something else of value, and do not necessarily wait until it is lost.

But the last paragraph may be treated as a philosophical digression, having no relation to the story, which was continued by my friend as follows:

"Then 'Fatty,' after a brilliant coup, got some racehorses of his own. He was tired of backing other people's gee-gees, and wished to try how he could work them under his own proprietorship and supervision. He had no desire to own high-class horses. He knew that money could be made out of little races as well as out of big, only with greater certainty. He had not a soul above platers; his argument was that you can win as much with a bad horse as with a good one if you can back him with confidence to beat worse."

"Incontrovertible," I remarked, interrupting the story for a moment; "but I never could find worse than mine. Nobody ever had such bad ones as those which I collected with great care at a small expense."

"No one ever accused you of knowing the game," said my friend, severely. "You should only go out with a barrel organ and a monkey, being tied to its tail. You might be clever enough to take the pennies if the donors placed them in your hand, closed it over them tenderly, and swore you to secrecy. But 'Fatty' was a perfect tradesman. He was after the nimble ninepence every time. He used to back his platers when it was good enough to do so; when not, he used to let other people back them, and invest his money on something else. It is a beautiful game so long as you can play it without danger from the mob or from the stewards."

"Who was 'Fatty's' trainer?" I asked, feeling confident that position was not a sinecure.

"Why, surely you know," retorted the historian. "'Fatty' would, of course, only have one sort of trainer—a man who would do as he was told without asking questions. Old Jerry Smiggins, of Ripston, realized his ideal of that character. You remember Jerry—he always seemed to be trying to 'best' somebody, and was generally in debt. Talk about the very 'warm' members, he could give most of them a start over what is called 'a rogue's course,' and make hacks of 'em when it came to pure thieving. I should not like to be a dying man engaged in cuddling my money-bags for the last time if Jerry were in the sick chamber watching my struggles. He would accelerate my doom to obtain the treasure."

"And how did his employer trust him?" I inquired, for I had a little knowledge of the Ripston trainer, and recognized that the elegant simile as to the peril of the moribund person toying with his cash deposits was not an exaggeration. Indeed, Jerry would no doubt have also removed any false teeth that might have been in the unfortunate person's jaws, so as to get the gold to bet with.

"Trust him," replied my informant; "well, you know how far such men trust each other. Like one hungry dog trusts a hungrier one in sight of an odorous bone. So long as both could get a bite they do not worry each other as to which secured the most pestiferous portion. They went on well for a time, and 'Fatty's' nose reflected his prosperity to a marked extent; it beamed upon us in the paddock and assumed more colossal proportions and brighter tints as its owner put on flesh and added to his balance at the bank. Then came the picturesque incident at Camptown Park previously hinted at."

Here the orator took breath and expanded his chest before embarking on the more exciting part of his recital. Refreshed by the rest, he continued:

"'Fatty' had one of his platers in a selling-race at Camptown, and on the book it had a great chance. Accordingly, the public made his horse favorite, and backed it down to even money in a large field of runners. 'Fatty' could not stand that; he did not care for even money chances. So, after conferring with his trainer, he gave him instructions to the effect that the favorite need not exert himself unduly in the race, and that precautionary measures might wisely be adopted with that end (the wrong end) in view. Having arranged matters to his satisfaction, the astute owner of the favorite went into the ring and backed a horse which he believed was a certainty while his candidate enacted the part of spectator. A jockey who would listen to reason when it took the form of ready money was riding the favorite. Therefore it was that when the horse cantered to the post 'Fatty' felt slightly above himself—his usual sensation when he considered that he was backing one certainty in a race, and laying against another certain not to win.

"The result of the race, however, was not what he desired. The favorite had more in hand than his owner or trainer thought. His jockey could not quite hold him; thus he found himself near home in view of the public before he was able to get a pull. It was then too late, pull as hard as he could. People would see him; he might be warned off. Naturally fearing that disaster, he sat down and rode a finish of considerable merit, making a dead heat of it. You may imagine his employer's awful sensations. He had backed one of the dead-heaters to win a large stake; he had laid against the other to lose a lot of money!

"Then Jerry Smiggins appeared in the paddock, and held conference with his patron. The result seemed satisfactory to the latter; he whispered a few words to his trainer, and Jerry hurried away again as though on a mission of importance. It was so, for that dead heat was never run off!"

"They agreed to divide?" I asked, innocently, having no idea at that time what bad men will do to get money.

"Agreed to divide!" repeated my friend, with scornful emphasis. "Fancy 'Fatty' dividing anything with anybody when he had a chance of collaring the lot! When the time arrived for running off the dead heat the favorite could not be found. Jerry had been to the stables surreptitiously and lost him!"

This, like other things, is, I am informed, easily done when you know how to do it. "Fatty" still goes racing, and is far fatter than ever, especially underneath his white waistcoat. But the public do not rush after his hot favorites now; and some of the punters—those who bet for a living and live well at times—declare that they can afford to lose when "Fatty" wins.—In Town.

GLASS MADE BY MACHINERY.

Reducing the Price of Finished Product and Averting Trouble.

Machinery is beginning to play a very important part in flint and green-glass manufacture, says the Pittsburg Dispatch. The introduction of one machine alone for simplifying the making of fruit jars was instrumental in reducing the price list last fall, and its further application is expected to be a large factor in the settlement of wages this year. To give an idea of the revolution which is impending in this branch of the glassware business, one firm turned out last September, with five machines, 32,000 jars a day. For a month past four additional machines have been in use, and the daily output has been 57,000 jars. There is now being built an additional tank furnace, which will double the capacity of the works and bring up the daily production to over 100,000 jars, or say 30,000,000 jars per year, which will be fully one-third of the entire fruit-jar production of the United States. Lamps, the foot and bowl of which were formerly jointed by hand, and often very imperfectly done, are now made by machines, which form the oil fount and foot at one operation and out of one piece of glass. The collar is blown into the glass and the lamp is practically indestructible. One firm of punch tumbler blowers has hitherto employed a few hand blowers, each hand turning out about 600 tumblers per turn. In the same factory ten machines will soon be at work, which will give an output of 100,000 punch tumblers per day.

Bones in a Silver Vein.

If the find of a Colorado silver miner, made half a dozen years ago, be taken into account, there is but little doubt that the human race existed on this continent as long ago as the time when the silver veins were in process of formation. In the Rocky Point mine, at Gilman, 400 feet below the surface a number of human bones were found imbedded in the silver-bearing ore. When taken out over $100 worth of the ore still clung to the bones. An arrowhead, made of tempered copper and four inches long, was also found with the remains.

80-Year-Old Bigamist.

Joseph Bishopp, aged 80 years, has been arrested in Anderson, Ind., for bigamy, the charges being preferred by his fourth wife, who is now residing in the state of Ohio. Last week Bishopp married Rebecca Shaw. In some manner the Ohio woman found that he had entered the matrimonial state again, and she proceeded to immediately bring action against him. He will fight the case. It is somewhat complicated and he claims that he thought he had a divorce from the woman.

TOILERS OF THE SEA.

PERILS AND HARDSHIPS OF THE COD-FISHER'S LIFE.

Lots of Hard Work in Cold and Fog—On the Grand Banks in Winter—Peculiar Qualities of the Gloucester Skipper.

PASSENGERS on an ocean steamship are sometimes startled as the great floating palace which carries them westward shoots her black prow into a clump of little schooners anchored, it seems, nearly in the middle of the ocean, says the Leadville Herald-Democrat. Then they realize that they are crossing the fishing banks, which are located south of Newfoundland, and hundreds of miles from the New England shore.

Life on the banks is bad enough in summer. There are hardships and dangers then in plenty, but along about this season of the year, when the banks are swept by cold storms, the dangers as well as the hardships are just about doubled. Still the fishermen stick to the banks, for that is where they find the cod, and to many of them the cod is the only talisman that will transform toil into dollars. So, no matter whether the wind blows high or low, whether the fog wraps them in its hazardous folds or the sun shines, whether it rains or snows, the "bankers" go out in their dories to set their trawls and never think of laying their course for Gloucester town until their schooner will hold no more fish or their provisions run out. Although most "bankers" are called Gloucester men, as a matter of fact a great many of them regard that place merely as a foreign port in which they find themselves once or twice a year. It used to be that Gloucester boats were manned by Gloucester men, all Yankees of the peculiar species known to Cape Ann. But that was when there was more money in fishing than there is today. Now the Gloucester boats carry crews to which all nations have contributed, with perhaps a few exceptions. Portuguese, Scandanavians, French, Nova Scotians and Spanish ship in the Yankee boats and take their pay in good American dollars. But the boats themselves are of Gloucester build and their captains are Gloucester born and bred. When a fishing boat sails for the banks she carries provisions for six months or more, and in her hold are great bins of salt sufficient to keep all the cod which can be piled into her. She is not a commodious craft at best, but the greater part of the space below decks must be reserved for the catch, and so the crew's quarters are always cramped. The dozen or fifteen men are crowded into a little cabin in which there is just room enough for a row of narrow bunks on each side of a table in the center. In the forward end is the cook's galley, where that dignitary exercises a wonderful economy of space in disposing of his pots and pans. Even on deck, there it little room, for what space is not occupied by the water butts and other casks is taken up by the dories, which fit into each other like so many spoons. But fisherman have neither time nor inclination for promenading. Once the banks are reached the captain picks out his berth, furls his sails, drops his anchor and sets a little triangular piece of canvas known as a riding sail. Just how he knows where to find the fish he will not explain. Perhaps he couldn't if he tried, but knew he does or else he would never be captain of a Gloucester fisherman. The average navigator would worry himself sick in trying to find out where he was after floating around on the banks for a few weeks, changing berths in the fog or in the dark. The Gloucester skipper may not trouble to "take the sun" once a month, but still he has a fair idea of the exact spot of the banks on which his anchor rests. There is a tradition that some of the veterans among them can determine their location by simply smelling of the lead as it comes from the bottom. This beats even the old yarn which is told in rhyme of Obadiah Folger, the Nantucket whaler, whose mate tried to puzzle him by dipping the tallowed end of the sounding lead into a box of earth brought from home. The grizzled captain was not to be fooled that way, however, for he sang out in great alarm:

Nantucket's sunk, I know, I know.
Heave ho the lead! Heave ho!

At any rate, they are the most skillful of navigators and, what is more to the purpose, they know the banks better than the streets of their native town and are more familiar with the habits of the cod than of their next-door neighbor. Once the anchor is down the dories are sent out to set the trawls. The dories are slight, frail-looking little boats, sharp at each end, with straight sides and flat bottoms, but they will ride like ducks over seas that make big steamships stagger. Even the French fishing brigs send to Gloucester after their dories. Two men are sent out in a boat. One man rows while the other pays out the trawl, a long rope, buoyed at each end, to which the lines and hooks are attached. Each boat carries several of these trawls and as soon as the last one is set and anchored it is time to row back to the first one. Beginning at one end the fisherman pulls in the trawl. On his hands he wears heavy mittens, re-enforced by cloth and sometimes by leather. In spite of this protection, however, his hands are generally cut and swollen, for a small cod line with a fish on the end of it weighing from ten to seventy-five pounds is not an easy thing to handle. The second man stands in the stern and as the trawl is pulled in he takes off the fish, kills it with a blow of his club and coils the trawl in a tub at his feet. Perhaps you can imagine what an unpleasant job this is in the summer, but unless you have had a similar experience you cannot conceive the hardship of it in winter. There is peril, too. No one but a "banker" could stand in a pitching, tossing dory and do any sort of work. Besides this, you must remember that he is out there on the ocean, perhaps two or three miles away from his schooner with nothing to guide him back but his instinct. When the fog shuts down suddenly he is in great danger of missing the little craft altogether, even though the fog bell is rung steadily on such occasions.

Then, when he has six or eight trawls out and sees a storm coming up, he must get them in again if possible before he seeks safety. When he does return, with a dory loaded to the gunwales with fish, he is given only a brief space of time to swallow his supper before he has to go on deck and help "dress down" the day's catch. In this work each man has a particular part which he performs. The fish first go to a man who cuts off the heads with one swing of the cleaver and jerks out the entrails with another movement. The next man splits the cod lengthwise and takes out the backbone. Then the fish are washed and passed down into the hold, where the packers and salters are at work by lantern-light. An expert salter is almost in as much demand as a good skipper. The fish are piled in layers as compactly as possible and are sprinkled with salt, so that they will keep until they can be unloaded on the Gloucester wharf, whence they go to the pickling vats and then to the drying yards.

"AGIN" THE RAILROAD.

Why the New Project Did Not Prosper.

A new railroad had been projected across Apache county and Col. Sanders was sent over to Dry Falls to talk the matter up at a public meeting and get the county to vote a big subscription, says the New York Journal. He told his audience what benefits would be derived from railroad communication with the outer world and after an enthusiastic address, lasting half an hour, he said he would like to hear from the audience. Thereupon Bill Shorter arose and asked:

"Kurnel Sanders, would that 'ere railroad 'o yours cheapen the price of whisky in this town?"

"It would," replied the colonel. "Yes, sir, I can promise you that it would cheapen the price of whisky by one-half."

"Then put me down as bein' agin it," continued Bill, as he reached around to feel if his gun was there. "I'm keepin' a saloon, I am, and if 30-cent drinks ar' goin' down to 15, then I don't want no railroad."

Then Tom Davis arose and inquired if the boys would have the privilege of shooting at the engineers, the same as they did at the stage drivers. The colonel wanted to dodge the question but had to answer that the shooting privileges would probably be somewhat curtailed.

"Then I'm agin yer railroad!" exclaimed Tom. "And whatever I'm agin ginerally dies in about ten days."

Then Joe Thayer arose to suppose a case. Suppose he was walking on the railroad track and a train came along. Would he be expected to give that train the right of way? The colonel hemmed and hawed and said that railroad trains always had the right of way in every country, but Joe waved his arms about and shouted:

"Then I'm also agin yer railroad and we've had gab 'nuff! The only durned thing I ever turned out fur was an avalanche that slid a hull mountain seven miles down into the valley, and I've always been dawggoned sorry I did that!"

The colonel tried to go on but the meeting broke up and the railroad was never built.

FRENCH PRECAUTIONS.

Against the Spread of the Plague from India.

The French government has adopted special measures with a view to preventing the spread of the plague from India, says a Paris correspondent of an exchange. Nevertheless, considerable alarm is being expressed and, moreover, fault is being laid at England's door on the ground that she does not discourage the dangerous pilgrimages to Mecca and also that she holds aloof from the other powers in the matter of arrangements for prophylactic and other means. Dr. Proust has just read a paper on "The Defense of Europe Against the Plague" to one of the academies, in which he says that if the convention signed in Paris in 1894 had been ratified, Persia and Europe would now be protected. Active surveillance should be exercised over everything coming from Bombay, and, believing that the other governments will also do their duty, he trusts that Europe may, after all, be safe from the scourge. Dr. Roux, on whom the mantle of Pasteur has fallen, is more reassuring. He scouts the idea that the plague could work any havoc in Europe, for the simple reason that sanitary conditions are very different in this quarter of the globe from what they are among the Hindoos and the Chinese. Dr. Roux declares that if some cases were to break out in France the institute would experience no difficulty in supplying all the serum that might be required.

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION.

Circumstances That Kept Cleveland from Hendricks' Funeral.

Behind the law of Presidential succession is a curious chapter of unwritten history. It was told today by a Missourian, who has been for many years a trusted official of the United States senate. He explains fully an incident, almost forgotten now, but once the cause of much criticism of President Cleveland. Until ten years ago the law was that the President pro tempore of the senate succeeded to the Presidential office in the event of the death or incapacity of both President and Vice-President. In the absence of a President pro tempore, the succession devolved upon the speaker. But either of these officers only acted as President until congress could be convened on twenty days' notice and a special election could be held. Early in the first term of Mr. Cleveland, Vice-President Hendricks died at his home in Indianapolis. A situation which was without precedent existed. Up to the time of his sickness Mr. Hendricks had prevented the senate from electing a President pro tempore. He had been able to do this by declining to vacate the chair and to recognize that privilege. The senate was Republican by a narrow majority. The Vice-President, having some political advantage in mind by so doing, steadfastly refused to let the Republicans organize. When he died there was no President pro tempore. The death occurred between the dissolution of one congress and the regular session of the next congress. There was no speaker. At the White House President Cleveland was completing his preparations to go to Indianapolis to attend the funeral. Senator Edmunds was at the capitol, busy in his committee room. The suggestion came to his mind: What would happen if the President should be killed or be rendered unfit for duty by an accident on this contemplated journey to Indianapolis?

"Senator Edmunds," said the Missourian, "was much disturbed. The more he thought of the peculiar possibilities the graver the situation seemed to him. He asked me to find some other senators and send them to him. Only two were about the capitol. They were soon closeted with Mr. Edmunds. He told them his opinion of the situation. He said that if anything should happen to Mr. Cleveland the country would be without a head. There would be no one with even the temporary authority to call an extraordinary session of congress. It would be impossible to take any step. No special election could be ordered. There would be no relief from the confusion until the regular date for the assembling of congress came round in December. Until the senate chose a President pro tempore and the house elected a speaker, nobody could perform any of the duties of President.

"The law then relating to Presidential succession was laid before the other senators. The anomalous condition had not occurred to them. They agreed at once that Senator Edmunds was right. When he suggested that under the circumstances the President ought to be specially careful they approved the suggestion. As the result of the conference Senator Edmunds came out and asked me to get a carriage for him. He rode direct to the White House and told Mr. Cleveland he must not go to Indianapolis. He went over the ground, showing the President that if an accident happened to him the country would be left without an executive for months, until December came. The President was astonished. He had not had the slightest realization of how much depended on his life at that time. He acknowledged the force of Senator Edmund's argument, immediately cancelled the orders for transportation and remained in Washington."

There was much criticism over the failure of Mr. Cleveland to be present at the Hendricks obsequies. The newspapers couldn't understand the apparent lack of consideration. The President said nothing. This is the first time the circumstances of the senatorial conference and of Senator Edmunds' hurried visit to the White House have been told. As soon as congress convened after Mr. Hendricks' death Senator Edmunds fathered and pushed to enactment a bill which made impossible the repetition of such a crisis. The law of succession now is such that a vacancy in the office of President of the United States is beyond all probability. If the President dies the Vice-President takes the office and holds it to the end of the term. If both the President and the Vice-President die, the Secretary of State succeeds. Succession falls in turn upon the members of the cabinet, including the Secretary of Agriculture.

SAVED BY A HUMAN ROPE.

Firemen Make a Brave Rescue of an Imperiled Oarsman.

Four brave firemen of Paterson, N. J., formed a real span of life that saved Frederick Billson from being dashed to pieces at the foot of Passaic falls, says the New York News. The human chain was the only means by which the imperiled man could be rescued. Billson is an expert oarsman of the Excelsior Boat Club, so, though the river was unusually strong, he thought nothing of going out in his shell for a short pull. The current was too strong for him, though, and he and his boat were soon swept over the dam and toward the falls. The frightened oarsman jumped overboard and swam against the current so pluckily that a few yards farther downstream he was able to clutch and cling to a rock. But a precipice eighty feet deep confronted him and he would have perished miserably had not Capt. Stewart Taylor of truck 3 of the local fire department seen him. Calling to Foreman Kearney, Engineer Nichols and Fireman William Kinnane, the chief rushed to Billson's assistance. The four men formed a chain with Kinnane at the lower end, and Billson was seized and dragged to dry land, just as he was about to loose his hold on the rock. Billson is rapidly recovering at his home, 168 Liberty street. All Paterson is praising the heroes who formed the living life-line.

"Praying John."

Out in Ellis, Kan., is an old man who, for many years, has enjoyed the sobriquet of "Praying John." His name is John Horrigan, and every day, rain or shine, winter and summer, in sickness and in health, he has, at the rising of the sun and the going down thereof, knelt on the open prairie and prayed. The place where he prays has been worn hard and smooth by his knees. It is not within the memory of the oldest inhabitant that "Praying John" ever missed his devotion. He is held in great respect by his neighbors because of his sincerity and his consistent piety. Observant travelers, passing through Ellis on the trains, have seen the old man kneeling in the snow with his gray head bared, and wondered at it.—Chicago paper.

AMBITIONS OF A BOOTBLACK.

Since He Received a Letter From McKinley They Have Climbed High.

A telegram from Canton, two days after McKinley had been nominated, stated that he had received a letter of congratulation from William Politz, a Crosby street bootblack of this city, who wanted the exclusive privilege of polishing shoes at the White House during the next administration. He sent his congratulations, and Maj. McKinley wrote him a note thanking him. After the receipt of the letter Politz was the most important man in Crosby street, and he was consulted by his neighbors on questions ranging from domestic economy to tariff legislation and the arbitration treaty. Politz took his new honors easily, and he did not give up his bootblack's outfit. One day he happened to be in the coroner's office looking for boots to polish, when Coroner Dobbs needed an Italian interpreter, and Politz was the man selected. He did his work so well that Assistant District Attorney Bell, who was present, was impressed with his ability, and secured for him a place in the district attorney's office, where he is now acting as interpreter and finding witnesses and getting evidence. Politz has received no appointment from the White House, and his ambition has soared away above being bootblack to the president. He says that he is going to study law, and some day he hopes to try cases for the district attorney. Politz believes that his McKinley letter has been his mascot, and when he has a law office of his own he is going to hang the letter in a frame above his desk.—New York Sun.

DRUMMING UP A BAND.

Sailors and Musicians Aboard the Good Ship Niobe.

The German ship Niobe, which arrived from Newcastle, Eng., early in November, boasts of the most unique band that has ever been seen here, says the San Francisco Chronicle. It consists of an accordion, base and snare drums, a tambourine and a triangle. When the Niobe left Antwerp, about seven months ago, she shipped a new crew, the men of which were strangers to each other.

Peter Christensen brought an accordion out of his chest when the ship was two days out, and immediately he was the idol of the forecastle. Then Godfried Klenger produced a tambourine and shared the honors. But Peter was a leader, and determined to have a band to lead. Hendrich Willig had an ear for music, and he said he could play a tringle if there was one to be had. Peter tied a string to a marlinspike and told Hendrich to use his sheath-knife to beat a tattoo. Julius Hallock cut the heads off a herring barrel and covered both ends with canvas, which he soaked with water, and he had a snare-drum. Carl Hensen sawed the ends off a flour barrel and, stretching canvas over the aperture, created a fine-sounding base drum. Then Carl took the heads off a coal-oil can and made a pair of cymbals, and the little German band was complete.

INDIAN RELICS.

Discovery in the Beaver Valley by Two Allegheny Boys.

An interesting find was made last Sunday by two young geologists from Allegheny, near the old log house on the McMahon place, just south of town. The find consisted of three flint hatchets, or tomahawks, twenty-two arrowtips, one large and one small clay mortar (supposed to have been used for the grinding and mixing of maize) and a number of small stone dishes.

These stone dishes were likely used by the medicine-man of the tribe for mixing medicine or probably were used for mixing war-paint, as they were all stained with a red substance that very much resembled ochre. These young men are the same that made the interesting discovery at Dugan's run last summer, and, although they were not looking for Indian relics, they value their find highly.—Beaver Falls Republican.

A GREAT deal of nonsense has been written—and believed, about blood purifiers. What purifies the blood? .. .. ..

THE KIDNEYS PURIFY THE BLOOD AND THEY ALONE.

If diseased, however, they cannot, and the blood continually becomes more impure. Every drop of blood in the body goes through the kidneys, the sewers of the system, every three minutes, night and day, while life endures.

Warner's Safe Cure

puts the kidneys in perfect health, and nature does the rest.

The heavy, dragged out feeling, the bilious attacks, headaches, nervous unrest, fickle appetite, all caused by poisoned blood, will disappear when the kidneys properly perform their functions.

There is no doubt about this. Thousands have so testified. The theory is right, the cure is right and health follows as a natural sequence.

Be self-convinced through personal proof.

Recovering Taxes Illegally Abated.

County Attorney Fleming has served notice on County Treasurer John Frater, that suit will be brought against him to recover the amount of interest and penalty abated on taxes of L. J. Cale by the board of county commissioners recently, amounting to $1,100. Mr. Fleming says that, as far as he can ascertain, and he also has the opinion of the attorney general, the law fixes the responsibility on the county treasurer, and says any treasurer who does not collect interest and and penalty shall be liable for the amount not collected. Mr. Frater is quite indignant that he is made a party to the suit, as he says he accepted the money for the taxes on a statement from the county auditor, and he had no means of knowing but what it included the interest and penalty. That he has the statement of the auditor showing the taxes to be the amount he accepted, which ought to exonerate him from not making a greater charge. Mr. Fleming says himself that it is not just that Mr. Frater should stand the loss, but so far as he can see at present the law holds him responsible. He says, however, he intends to examine the matter more closely, and if he can see his way clear to do so, suit will be brought making the county treasurer, auditor, clerk, and Mr. Cale parties to the suit, and the court can determine where the responsibility lies. The suit is the result of the recommendations of the recent grand jury.

Sheriff Errickson went to Sauk Rapids and St. Cloud on Monday noon on business. At Sauk Rapids the sheriff will look up the matter of the conviction of the horse thief arrested by him some weeks ago and delivered to the Benton county authorities. By the terms of a state law anyone apprehending a horse thief, shall, on his conviction, be paid a reward of $200, and Mr. Errickson wouldn't mind getting the $200.

Mrs. R. P. Paine has sold her plumbing shop to F. H. Greenhagen and W. H. Thompson, of this city. Mr. Greenhagen has been employed by Slipp Bros. of this city as tinner for several years and Mr. Thompson has held a position in the N. P. tin shop for more than ten years past. They will run a tin shop in connection with the plumbing business. Both men are experience mechanics, and have a thorough acquaintance in the city, hence they will undoubtedly do a most successful business from the start.

HANGED HIMSELF.

Chas. L. Bjorkgren, the Popular Night Clerk at the Arlington Hotel, Destroys His Own Life.

POOR HEALTH THE CAUSE.

Funeral Services Sunday Afternoon Under the Auspices of White Cross Lodge No. 36, Knights of Pythias, at the Episcopal Church.

Chas. L. Bjorkgren, the popular night clerk at the Arlington Hotel, committed suicide on Tuesday, by hanging himself in his room at the hotel. At what hour of the day he committed the deed is only a matter of conjecture, but it was not discovered until 6:15 in the evening. He retired to his room at about nine in the morning, his usual time, and no sound was heard from there to indicate that anything unusual was transpiring. He usually arose about 5 p. m., going on duty at 6 o'clock. As he did not put in an appearance at that time, Manager Thos. Rutherford sent up the call boy to awaken him. The boy returned and reported that he could not arouse him, and the door and transom were locked so that he could not get in. Mr. Rutherford then, in company with Chas. Eckman, another hotel employe, went to Bjorkgren's room, and affected an entrance by working the key inside out of the lock and using a pass key. On entering they were horrified to find Bjorkgren cold in death, with a rope around his neck hanging to a bed post. From the position of the body and the articles about the room, it was evident beyond a doubt that the unfortunate young man had destroyed his own life. He had deliberately cut the rope from the laundry bag and making a noose of one end, had placed it around his neck, tying the other end to a loop made of cloth torn from the bag, which was placed over the corner post of the head of the bed. He must have laid down on the bed, after placing the rope around his neck, and rolled off, the force of the fall drawing the noose tight enough to choke him to death. He had entirely disrobed except his undershirt, and had not put on his night shirt, which was lying on the bed. He was lying on his right side when found, only his head and shoulders being raised from the floor.

Manager Rutherford immediately sent for Coroner Dean, who arrived in a few moments and cut down the body and had it removed to the undertaking rooms of Losey & Dean. He decided no inquest was necessary, as it was beyond question a case of suicide.

The rash act of Bjorkgreen was a great shock to the people of the hotel and his many friends about town, and no possible reason can be assigned for the deed except poor health. He was quite a bad sufferer from inflammatory rheumatism, at times being unable to move about without suffering great pain. But he was always in good spirits, and seemed especially so lately, as he has been gaining in weight and health. He had been at the Arlington about six months, gaining twenty pounds during that time. Before retiring to his room in the morning he laughed and joked and was in his usual good spirits, and there was not the slightest indication that he contemplated self-destruction.

On Wednesday morning Coroner Dean, Mr. Rutherford and Judge of Probate Milton McFadden examined all his personal effects, but nothing could be found that would throw any light on his reasons for suicide. There was nothing to indicate that he had any relatives or near friends to claim his remains. From conversations he has had in times past with acquaintances, it is known that he has a father in Sweden, but his address is not known. Also an uncle at Valley City, N. D., but he has not been heard from, although efforts were made to find him by wire.

Deceased was a Knight of Pythias in good standing, being a member of the Fargo lodge, and the local lodge will take charge of the funeral and bury him here, unless relatives claim him before. The funeral services will be held at the Episcopal church Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, Rev. Canon Pentreath officiating.

Since the above was written a letter has been received from the deceased's uncle, who resides in Valley City, N. D., whose name is Otto Chilberg. He advises burying him here, and suggests that his personal effects be sent to him and he will forward them to his parents.

KNIGHTS, ATTENTION!

All members of White Cross Lodge No. 30, K. of P., are requested to meet at the lodge room on Sunday afternoon, April 4th, at 1:30 o'clock sharp, to attend the funeral of Bro. Chas. L. Bjorkgren. Services from the Episcopal church.

The Prodigal Father.

The above entitled exceedingly funny and entertaining comedy will be produced at Sleeper opera house next Wednesday, April 7th, by one of the best companies that will visit Brainerd this year. This company has appeared in all the leading cities in the United States, and has everywhere achieved the greatest success. The press has uniformly mentioned this fine attraction in the most glowing terms. "The Prodigal Father" has an intensely interesting plot, and the story of an old scientist who has lived a pure and easy life.

He is about to make a trip to Africa for the purpose of exploring the wilds of that country in the interests of a geographical society of which he is a member.

Just as he is embarking in the steamer, he is entranced by a vision of loveliness in the shape of a gay semo-comic actress.

He starts in pursuit of her, and follows her for two months, endeavoring to make an impression, but, finding that he has made no progress, he gives up the chase. In his pursuit of the fair charmer, he has taken no thought of the flight of time; hence the ship has sailed, and he is compelled to return home.

Upon arriving there, he uses his powers of imagination to describe his trip—or supposed trip—to Africa—and it is his Munchausen-like stories that produce much of the fun.

Besides the play itself there are numerous specialties of a most entertaining character, especially bright and taking. The manager of the house desires all to see this attraction, and has secured a reduction in prices to 50 and 75 cents for reserved seats, 35 cents for general admission, and 25 cents for gallery for the evening entertainment. Reserved seat sale now open at Atwood's drug store.

A matinee will be given in the afternoon, commencing at 2:30, when the complete play and all the specialties will be produced. The matinee prices will be 50 cents for adults and 25 cents for children for first floor, and 25 cents for gallery.

FREE—Bicycle—FREE.

E. F. Atwood, the popular Front street druggist, has on exhibition in his store a fine high grade lady's bicycle, which he will give away free on the evening of July 3rd. NOW IS THE TIME.

The wise man knows it is as much to his interest to keep his buggy painted and in prime condition as it is to feed his horse well. A few dollars invested now will preserve the beauty of your Carriage and extend its days and usefulness.

Spring will soon be here and you won't have time to have your Buggy painted then. With confidence, all will be well.
