The Aitkin Age is much improved under Mr. Luther's supervision.

It is claimed that Knute Nelson is opposed to a union with Canada.

The watermelon raisers of the south have formed a trust and will have a corner on colic during 1889.

The Wisconsin Central road are turning some of their oldest conductors out into the cold and cruel world to fight the battle of life alone.

An ostrich escaped from one of the California ostrich farms last week, swam a river, and gave the horsemen a run of 27 miles before he was captured.

The Sultan, at Zanzibar, has issued a decree proclaiming that murderers shall forfeit their lives, and that thieves shall lose their left hands. This is rather hard on the thieves.

There is a movement on foot among the Scandinavians to agitate the matter of local option in Minnesota by counties, and the matter will be pushed by the Scandinavian ministry of the state.

The Methodist Preachers Association, of Columbus, Ohio, are protesting against a display and ball at the inauguration of President-elect Harrison. They most emphatically kick against the expenditure of $100,000 to imitate the extravagance of European courts when a Christian man, like Gen. Harrison, has been elevated to the presidency. Our Methodist brethren are on the right track.

The worst has come. The young ladies of the Pacific coast have organized an "Engaged Girl's Protective Union." Hereafter the young man who gives his girl a ring cannot expect to recover the ring or be reimbursed for cash expenditures on ice cream and oyster suppers by simply breaking the engagement. There was a time when this was a free country but we are fast drifting into a state of bondage.

Itasca county will knock for admission as an organized county at the coming session. A correspondent writing from Grand Rapids to the Globe says that under the present rule the entire west half of that county is controlled by outsiders to suit their will, and the truth of the assertion is shown up by the recent election. There should be less monkeying with Itasca county politics, at least, for in years past the vote of this isolated county was only needed to decide a close vote on any matter in which it had a voice.

Judging from the correspondence to the Globe from Brainerd one would infer that the representative from Crow Wing county had appeared personally before the correspondent of that paper and made an affidavit to support D. M. Sabin for United States senator, "as fact there is the best of authority for stating that the entire representation from the 39th district are solid for Sabin," says this 24-a column liar. In regard to Mr. Fleming we are authorized to state that he is pledged to no man and will act in this matter as his republican constituents in this section of his district desire him to.

Not Over Yet

We were of the opinion that newspaper strife over the late election had subsided but occasionally an echo reaches us yet. Bro. Stivers gave Donnelly a wipe in a recent issue and the Labor Echo comes back in Donnelly's defense as follows:

Bro. Stivers was pesky busy lungs ago for a fat man. Bro. Dunn defeated him for the legislature, with shaking monopoly structures. The P. H. Kelly party thought that they had annihilated what Bro. Stivers terms Donnellyism on the 14th of September, 1886, but Donnellyism buried the bosses on the 6th of November, 1888. Bro. Stivers is too good a man to keep up party strife. He ought to see that monopoly is behind the curtains in both parties and has only one object, to-wit: "To kill off Donnellyism and give monopoly a clear field. Bro. Stivers lets the cat out of the bag in these remarks.

Walloped Patsy.

Ed. Hotchkiss, of Detroit, Minn., 150 pounds, and Patsy Sullivan, of Portage, Wis., 180 pounds, were matched to fight fifteen rounds, Marquis of Queensbury rules, at Motley Christmas day. Sullivan was knocked out in the third round.

Strikingly Illustrated.

An exchange says a tramp was run over and killed by a train the other day in an Indiana town. It was at first thought that the remains were those of a Chicago anarchist, but the discovery of two bars of soap in the pockets of the deceased dispelled this illusion.

How it Happened

In regards to the shooting that occurred at Mille Lacs Lake last week we learn the following facts: Maywood, an eighteen year old son of Mr. Robert Morrison, was following a deer in the afternoon and as he was nearing a clump of bushes saw something move which he supposed to be the animal and fired. He then saw a man throw up his hands and fall and was so scared that he immediately turned and ran, home, not reaching there until late in the evening. The next morning upon investigation it was learned that he had killed an Indian who had been watching a runway for deer. There has been no action taken in the matter and it is regarded as purely accidental by the whites of that neighborhood. There are some threaths being made by the Indians but no trouble is apprehended.—Age.

How a Senator Is Elected.

In view of the great interest manifested by the people in the election of a United States senator, the Northfield News publishes the following for the information of the uninformed. It is worth reproducing:

In view of the great interest which the people are taking in the election of a United States senator from Minnesota, the time of such election and the manner thereof will be appropriate matter to publish for the information of those who are not posted on the subject. As provided by law the legislature meets on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in January biennially and the coming legislature will therefore assemble on January 8th, next. The first business in order will be the organization of each house by the election of officers, etc. The law in relation to the legislature indicating the election of United States senator will be found in the Gen'l Statutes of 1878 as revised from the act of 1869, and provides in substance as follows: The legislature shall proceed on the second Tuesday after the organization of the two houses preceding the expiration of the term of a United States senator (which in this instance under consideration will be fourteen days after January 8th, or on the 22nd of January) to vote for and elect a senator. Each house shall openly by a viva voce vote of each member present proceed to name one person as such senator, and the name of the person who receives a majority of the votes of all members present and voting shall be entered in the journal; but if either house fail to give such majority to the same person on that day such fact will be entered on the journal. At 12 o'clock on the next day following the members of the two houses shall assemble in joint convention in the hall of the house and the speaker shall call the convention to order an act as president of the joint convention, and the chief clerk of the house shall act as secretary thereof. If on calling the roll a majority of the members of both houses be found present in such joint convention, so much of the proceedings of the previous day as relates to the election of a senator to congress shall be read. If it is ascertained that the same person has received a majority of all the votes of the convention, a majority of all the members of both houses being present and voting, shall be deemed to have been elected. In case of no election by this vote, the joint convention shall meet at the same place at 12 o'clock m. of each succeeding day during the session of the legislature then pending, and take at least one vote as aforesaid until a senator to congress is elected.

Her Copper Colored Kid.

The daily press brings the news that Mrs. Chaska, nee Corabelle Fellows, the society belle from Washington, who created a sensation by marrying the Indian Chief Chaska, of Cheyenne agency, is now a mother. On the 23rd inst., at 12 o'clock m., a son was born, and mother and child are doing well. Since their return from the East the young couple resided at Swift Bird's camp, Chaska and his wife have lived beyond their means the past year, spending hundreds of dollars in traveling, purchasing the finest clothing and squandering thousands in farming implements and horses and carriages. The farming implements are useless, as Chaska has no talent for farming, and prefers to take it easy as long as he possibly can.

This is Poor Consolation.

The executive committee of the national association of Democratic clubs has issued an address to the 3,000 clubs in the United States, declaring that the next campaign will be fought on the same lines as the last, and urging the clubs to keep up their work of education for the people upon politico-economy and governmental questions, so that in the congressional elections of 1890 and in the presidential election of 1892, the party of the people may be successful.

THE NEWS RESUME.

The Cream of the News Gleaned From the Latest Associated Press Telegrams.

About Washington.

The president returned to the attorney general the papers in relation to the application for pardon of Benjamin Hopkins of Ohio, under sentence for embezzling and misapplying the funds of a national bank, with the following endorsement: "The conditions of this convict's health is such, as appears from an examination which I have had made, that that the question presented whether he shall die in prison or at home. On this presentation I am willing that he shall spend his remaining few days among his friends, regardless of any other consideration connected with the case. And on this ground alone his pardon is granted."

The Casualty Calendar.

Steven Cummings, the boy arrested on conviction of causing the death of Conductor Brakeader at La Crosse confessed that it was his gun that caused the fatal shooting. The two were sitting together in the grass when the gun exploded and killed Brakeader. It is when some ducks came in sight, and in grasping his gun quickly it was discharged. He was frightened and told the story he did. The district attorney believes this story and will not indict him.

In the series of the Exchange hotel, which burned at Missoula, Montana, were found the charred remains of a man and possibly two men. The remains were almost totally destroyed by fire. The location of the remains, and of flesh on the bones and other circumstances point strongly to the destruction of life. The evidence at the coroner's jury made it quite certain that a railroad man named Hawkins perished. He was last seen on the second floor of the second story in company with the entire disabled world. It was to Hawkins' room that Harrison fled to take the life of Gen. Harrison was arraigned, and, with his fellow prisoner villains, and that an attempt to execute their fiendish design was made the day but not that fiendish Harrison was murdered by one prisoner Gen. Harrison's best friends and weakest, and that Gen. Harrison's body had been held as a dead secret and is said that Gen. Harrison and that a full investigation of that affair, and a determined effort will be made to bring life murderers to justice.

News From Steeler.

Letters dated Stanley Falls, Aug. 29, have been delivered here by Tippoo Tib's men from Stanley Falls. They left Tippoo Tib at Stanley Falls from Henry M. Stanley on the 29th of July. Stanley was then 1,000 miles in the Aruwhimi, where he had arrived on Aug. 20. He had left Fort Bodo on the 28th of days before in perfect health and provided with plenty of food. Tippoo Tib had arranged to Bonyuna for the loads of stores in charge of the new road, and had started to meet Stanley into to join Emin. He reported all the news in the Congo State to Stanley, and also said the expedition wanted nothing. The Paris African Society had received and received the following dispatch from St. Petersburg, dated Friday, 2 p. m.:

I have just received information that Henry M. Stanley with Emin Pasha has reached the Aruwhimi. The news is reliable. For further details will follow.

In the Stanley Falls advices it is stated that Stanley had left Emin Pasha in the possession of vast stores of ivory and many guns. Emin Pasha had no intention of leaving Africa. It is not received any direct of detail from Stanley since the 28th of August. In the report that Gen. Grenfell had marched with 2,000 men against Emin Pasha, it was stated that the government had sent word from Gen. Grenfell showing that it was its intention to undertake such a march.

The New Sioux Bill.

The house committee on indians have been agreed to report the Gifford bill for the opening of the Sioux reservation, with a few amendments. The first change in the bill provides that the Indians shall be paid $1.50 per acre for its land taken up the first three years. The Gifford bill provided that the price per acre should be $1 for the first two years. This is the only change in the bill. The remaining lands to be sold for 75 cents per acre for the two years succeeding the opening after that are to be open to the public at 50 cents per acre. At the end of ten years the government shall have the right to step in and take all the remaining lands at 50 cents per acre. Another change provides that one-fifth of the money realized from the sale of lands shall be put aside to pay the expenses of educating the Indians, and the remaining two-thirds shall be distributed per capita among the Indians. This price per acre granted in the bill to be the Indians is considered unreasonable by the demands in this particular, but is against the advice of the secretary of the interior, who believed that $1 per acre, coupled with the long time allowed for sale, was entirely sufficient to sell settlers. The bill offered by the house to the Red River request will not be considered by the committee.

Does Excitement Shorten Life?

Whoever has studied man's earth ly tenure, and the causes which tend to lengthen or curtail it, will scarcely be have failed to notice how contradictory is the evidence of those who naturally look to explain them, and that their evidence, even when they agree, does not always accord with the experience of those who are as near as they appear around us. One authority says general physical development does not lengthen life. Another declares that a secret treaty had been concluded between Russia and Japan against England. The reason for this treaty was that Russia and Japan in the Pacific ocean, and possessing easy descent upon Siberia. To overcome this, the use of both navies was necessary for an amicable understanding with the Japanese ocean. A few months ago the treaty was rendered upon the empress of Japan, the decoration of the Order of St. Catherine.

Miners exploring with a diamond drill in the old Saginaw mine in Michigan, cut into a solid copper lode, at a date from 200 to 300 feet, which produced over half a million tons of ore up to 1883 when abandoned and not worked out. The recent discovery will result in reopening the mine.

The supreme court of Ohio decided that the will of the late Archbishop Purcell was valid, not cause the sale of the church property, which was in his name at the time of his death, to pay the $3,000,000 he held in trust for the Catholic church. It decided that all the property was never really his, but held in trust simply. The decision of the court below is confirmed.

It is understood that General Master Powderly will shortly issue a circular to all Knights of Labor pointing out the necessity for laws making employers liable to employes for injuries received through negligence, or arising through the negligence or indifference of superintendents or their agents. He will in a course of action for every assembly in the United States, and the executive committee of the Miners' National Trade District will attend to the matter in person. Powderly intends not to join the American Federation of Labor. In the Journal of United Labor, issued in Philadelphia, Mr. Powderly says over his own name: "Since the first session of the present assembly, eight years ago, business and a national department of labor have been established; and to this end, more than any other cause, must the credit be given to the work produced before the world be given. Even our worst enemies will accord that credit to the organization."

The War is Hatti.

Capt. Kelly, of the steamer Saginaw, which arrived in New York from Hayti, would not say much upon the subject of Hayti. All that was learned from other sources than the captain was that Haytien affairs were in the harbor of Port Au Prince, when the Saginaw left, and that the insurgents were marching on Port Au Prince on Dec. 8. Passengers by the Saginaw during the insurrection, from Hayti. On the morning of Dec. 7, the people of Port au Prince were startled by the report of the Dessalines, Petion, Toussaint Louverture and Salnave, which announced that Gen. Legitime had left Gonaives on the 5th inst., with 2,000 men, and was marching on the capital. Three shots were fired with blank cartridges to give notice of the coming of the insurgents. The forces consists in the city sent out in pelting to the number of their fleet, asking time to get out of the city. They soon given. Early the morning a proclamation was issued by the people fled into the hills, taking all the possessions they could conveniently carry. They loaded their effects on the board the other vehicles. The only carry "scarce" such, which is the Haytien name for mule. The mules being limited to fifty or sixty, the animals were loaded with all they could carry. The people were forced to convey a single mule load of goods and chattels. Many of the people were compelled to leave their effects behind. Dead by the dozen of Monday and $100 bill was one of a dollar's value. Tuesday, the 10th of the first day on which the people had to resume their usual occupations. All business matters marked the second day, and those of a commercial character began to transact business. Many of the residents clung to their habitations. In fact it was impossible to remove by many of the sick in the city with the time allotted by Legitime.

A Startling but Doubtful Story.

The New York Herald has the following story:

Bangkok, Siam, Sept. 29.—President Harrison's letter was received by the king of Siam. The question is a startling one, and that there should be any fear in the matter in the taking of it seems incredible. Nevertheless a rumor prevailing the inquiry has come out, and the source of it is such that they demand an otherwise thing and not to be ignored. This, which is but little fa has to be obtained concerning it, is the location of the mines, and the rumor to be not founded, and later developments are awaited with great interest. The facts, so far as they can be stated, are that a citizen from the United States has sold a story to a confidential friend which, if true, will be of the greatest value to the entire civilized world. It was to Siam that Gen. Harrison fled to take the life of Gen. Harrison was arraigned, and, with his fellow prisoner villains, and that an attempt to execute their fiendish design was made the day but not that fiendish Harrison was murdered by one prisoner Gen. Harrison's best friends and weakest, and that Gen. Harrison's body had been held as a dead secret and is said that Gen. Harrison and that a full investigation of that affair, and a determined effort will be made to bring life murderers to justice.

Dun's Christmas Gifts.

BY DWIGHT WELDON.

There's none so poor in all the world
But somebody comes to bless;
There's no one so rich but he needs
Through Christmas time to be kind.
Then let us remember this,
And every coming season
Be it blessed Christmas gifts!

The sky so pure and bright,
The stars that twinkle and twinkle,
The silhouette's golden light,
The moon to guard the sleeping feet
Its blade of silver fire,
The sparkling and sweet-smiling,
God's blessed Christmas gifts!

And baby, and home, and peace,
And joy, and home, and peace,
And the Christmas time,
Whose messages never cease;
And the Christmas time,
When life's last letter life,
Is the sweetest Christmas gift
God's blessed Christmas gifts!

A CHRISTMAS GHOST.

BY ALICE MAUD EWELL.

It was just two nights before Christmas. Bedtime had come at Locust Grove. The fires were all safely covered up, the lights all out, and the doors all locked downstairs. Suddenly the young ladies, cozily gossiping on their hearth-rug before a bright fire, were startled by a shriek and a shuffling of feet on the stairway without. "Robbers! Let's hide in the closet," cried one. "Let's cover our heads up," said anoth er. "Hush!" screamed a third. "Mercy!" ejaculated a fourth. "Sophy, don't open the door." "But I will open the door," answered Sophy, the boldest of the family, and, sure enough, she did.

There, with a comical expression of terror on his black face, with eyes staring and mouth open, stood Uncle Samson.

"Ah, it's you, Uncle Samson," said Sophy. "Where have you been so late? I'm afraid, on a visit to the pantry, and the decanter there," se verely.

"De laws gracious, young chil'n!" he gasped out. "I've been to no pantry. No, but wat's you t'ink I was like now? Ah—dey's been a ghos' gone! Yo' ole-fran' jest hissy-s come back dis night."

"Nonsense," cried practical Sophy. "Well, well," he replied, shaking his head mightily, "you see, I wuz jest a-creepin' roun', so stiff an' trimbly-ter see dat parlor fire all safe, w'en heah he come down de passige—never er bit of noise like human foot, boun' ter be—right straight towards me he co'ne; an' I see him in de moon-shine cla'ez day—his blue eyes an' his white hair an' his berry co'es de same. Lawd! I'll be skeered, I give 'im one look, den dodged an' kivered my head; an', when I raise up agin, he wuz gone—de law, de law! Dat Sandy ain't right! Dat's de ghos'es at dis ole place—but ole Marsecome back! Who'd ha thought it?"

Such was the outline of his tale, to which Sophy and the gentlemen in spite of the young ladies' smiles and mischievous cross-questioning. Uncle Samson, in his many subsequ ditions, many a time afterward to a kitchenful of awe struck listeners.

"I see the ghost," he always said from uphold the honor of our house." And this house is fine place to them, with plenty of hiding-corners outside and in. And, though they provides that the Indians shall be paid less once, why should they not to a stanch aristocrat like he is? Uncle Samson knows right from wrong in the vindication of our dignity."

"Oh, hush!" said Sophy, quite gravely—Sophy, most sensible of all, yet with a heart big and tender enough for every sympathy, human, real or imaginary. "Why should we laugh at such things? Who knows? But come, now, to bed, Samson. I'll light you safely to your door. Come softly, now, my father must not be disturbed."

She went out into the dim corridor, lamp in hand, as she spoke, and the others, all but Uncle Samson, arranged for the dinner-party next day, and for the festivities of the whole holidays. Besides, each girl had some mysterious surprise of her own for every one. Surprises, surprises, of all was Sophy. For was not her own particular "Somebody," coming this very day, to stay all through the holidays? And were there not probabilities of all sorts of delightful times to come?

The short, busy, active day came to an end at last, and Sophy, after a sunset faded, and a white moon shone clearly down on the white world, was standing before the looking-glass of a traditionally appropriate Christmas Eve. About ten o'clock, a man might have been seen, through the open door of the shade tree under the lawn approaching the house. He started promptly and paused a moment when he saw a light still shining from the parlor window. Then, with such early hours now as they used to keep," he muttered. Then, unconsciously, he looked at his watch. A mass of drooping vines sanctered him overhead; inside, a projecting window-seat hid his face from observation. He bent eagerly as he gazed at the lighted room, for

A blazing crackling fire ruddied the walls of the great square room, and in the light of it Sophy stood, while the girls were there. Pretty Sophy and sancy-looking Nan; Grace, the Bayden, deft Nellie, and Cecelia, the maintaining Alice; Annie and Cecelia still in short dresses and romping in face and figure; and another lady, somewhat sad of countenance, and with hair fast turning gray.

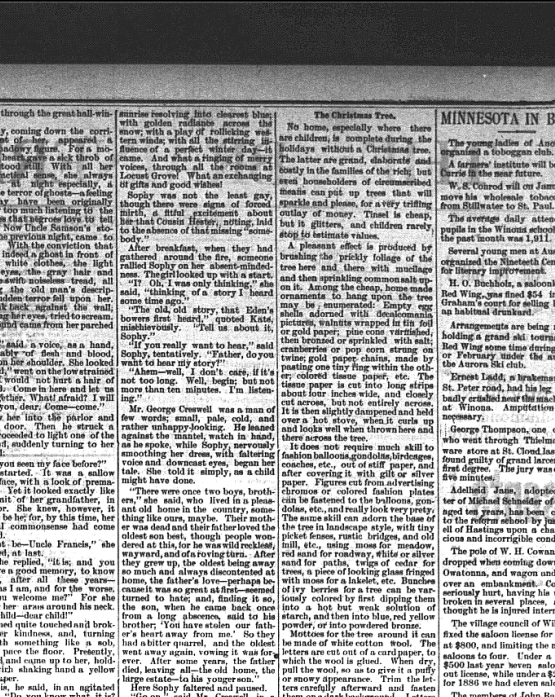
"I would have known her in a thousand," he whispered. "Always the same—the same."

For a moment, his eyes were misty and blinded with tears.

"We must have one chint—just one—before we retire," said Sue in her clear voice. "Come girls. Play for us, Bessie mamma."

"Ah!" breathed the listener, between his clenched teeth. "Mamma! And so he must have her too, in addition to all the rest? A crowning joy of possession!"

He panted, as he spoke, as in a dumb impotence of passion, an ugly light in his eyes.



The tell lady shook her head and pointed to the clock. But when the last ball passed with the tape, she yielded with a laugh, opened the piano, and began to play.

In a moment, they all gathered around her—six joyful though subdued young voices bursting into the Christmas hymn.

"Glory be to God on high," they sang; "and on earth peace, good will toward men! We praise Thee! we bless Thee! we worship Thee! we glorify Thee! we give thanks to Thee for Thy great glory!" What a magnificent old anthem it is—the noblest-worded and noblest of all the old collection and praise. "Thou that takest away the sins of the world, receive our prayer!" went on the clear sweet tones.

Perhaps the man outside had some such memories connected with those words. He hid his face with a groan. "I have been thinking," said Sophy, when the last "amen" had been uttered, the last note had died away, "what a mockery for us to be singing so here—we, the good-will—when everyone knows what a shadow of strife and ill-will has hung over this house all our lives."

Sophy was tired and a little cross, perhaps because somebody had failed to put in his appearance. "Whose fault is his wife? Yes, his wife," he added, and bound to suffer in his poverty and distress. No, no—keep our secret, Sophy. It was a foolish thing to tell you; and let me go as I came."

Sophy looked bewildered for a moment.

"The only woman you ever cared for?" she cried then. "My father's wife? Sophy, I thought your mother is dead, and that my father has never married again. Ah—now I see," sinking suddenly into her rocking-chair. "It is Cousin Hester. You heard us call her—as we always do—mamma. Oh, I am sorry I guessed it before!"

"Sophy," he said, earnestly, "my children know now. You think this still possible for me—me? Such a tainted reckless fellow as I have been?"

The sweet face was raised to his, the tender lips and angel's face there and the kind, warm, impulsive arms were about his neck. "Possible!" she cried. "It is certain. Oh, Uncle Francis, only come back."

They had a long talk together; each had much to tell, and twelve o'clock had struck before they said "good night." Then Mr. Francis Creswell left the house, by the side entrance through which he had come in, and wentto his lodgings in the village near by, while Sophy crept half guiltily, though with joyful heart, to bed.

What a clear beautiful Christmas morning followed! With a rose-red sunrise resolving into clearest blue, with golden radiance on the white snow; with a play of rollicking welcomes, through all the stirring Christmas of a perfect winter morning it came. And what a ringing of merry voices, through all the rooms of Locust Grove! What an exchanging of gifts and good wishes!

Sophy was not the least gay, though there were signs of forced mirth, a fitful excitement about her. Cousin Hester, sitting, laid to the absence of that missing "somebody."

After breakfast, when they had gathered around the fire, someone rallied Sophy on her absent-mindedness. The girl looked up with a start.

"I? Oh, I was only thinking," she said, "thinking of a story I heard some time ago."

"The old, old story, that Eden's bowers first heard," quoted Kate, mischievously. "Tell us about it, Sophy."

"If you really want to hear," said Sophy, tentatively. "Father, do you want to hear my story?"

"Ahem—well, I don't exactly, if it's not too long. Well, begin; but not longer than ten minutes. I'm listening."

Mr. George Creswell was a man of few words, small, pale, cold, and rather unhappy-looking. He leaned against the mantel, watch in hand, as he spoke. His daughter, standing smoothing her dress, with faltering voice and downcast eyes, began her tale. She told it simply, as a child might have done.

"There were once two boys, brothers," she said, who lived in an old home in the country, something like ours, maybe. Their mother was dead and their father loved the oldest son best, though people wondered at this, for he was a wild reckless, wayward, and of a roving turn. After they grew up, the oldest being away so much and the younger staying at home, the father's love—perhaps because it was so great at first—seemed to change, and finally was given to the son, when he came back once from a long absence, said to his brother: 'You have always our father's heart away from me.' So they had a bitter quarrel, and the younger went away again, vowing it was forever. After some years, the father died, leaving all the old home, the large estate—to his younger son."

Here Sophy faltered and paused. "Go on," said Mr. Creswell, in a low curious tone.

"Well, after this," said Sophy, "the younger son wrote kindly to the other, but received an angry reply, saying: 'You have robbed me out of my lawful rights, and now make offers of kindness. I'm not the man to receive such kindness. I want nothing more from you or yours.' And so the bitter feud went on and on.

"About a year ago, in a South American town, that older brother met a man, a former friend of his father, who told him that he had once before, he had spent a night at the old home in Virginia, and that the

The Christmas Tree.

No home, especially where there are children, is complete during the holidays without a Christmas tree. The latter are grand, elaborate and costly in the families of the rich; but good householders of circumscribed means can pick up trees that will sparkle and please, for a very trifling outlay of money. Tinsel is cheap, but is glittery, and children rarely stop to test such values.

A pleasant effect is produced by brushing the prickly foliage of the tree here and there with mucilage and then sparkling crystals of sugar on it. Among the cheap, home made ornaments to hang upon the tree may be mentioned: Pippy cone shells adorned with dendelcomania pictures, vaskets wrapped in tin foil or gold paper; cone cornucopias, then bronzed or sprinkled with gold; miniature or pop corn strung on twine; gold paper chains, made by pasting one tiny ring within the other; colored bird cages, etc. The cheapest paper is cut into long strips about four inches wide, and closely folded, first one way and then across. It is then slightly dampened and held over a hot stove, when it curls up and looks like lace when thrown into there across the tree.

If done with some much skill to fashion balloons, gondolas, birdcages, coaches, etc., out of stiff paper, and then pasted on bright gilt or colored paper. Figures cut from advertising chromos or colored fashion plates could be fashioned into shepherdesses, dolas, etc., and really look very pretty. The same skill can adorn the base of the tree, using moss, made by picked fenses, rustic bridges, and old rock, etc., using green meadow, red sand for roadway, white or silver sand for paths, twigs of cedar for trees, a piece of looking glass fringed with moss for a lakelet, etc. Bunches of ivy berries for a tree can be variously colored with gilt or silver, and put into a hot but weak solution of starch, and then into blue, red yellow or green dye. Give it a moment, after which the wool is glued. When dry, add the wool to the vine in a snowy or snowy appearance. Trim the letters carefully afterward and fasten them on a dark background. Tastefully decorated with rice have the effect of carved ivory. Cut out the letters on pasteboard, and then cover them with thick coating of paste or gum, and sprinkle or warm drop the grains of rice into it. The cards or mottoes can be made to resemble coral by dipping them into powdered cinnabar, mixed with alcohol. Letters covered with crumpled tinfoil have a good effect when used for the bedding of a motto, and can be made of holly, and have a rich, cord like appearance. The leaves are carefully cut from the vine and with the proper length, passing the needle through the center of each leaf.

The Trouble at Hayti.

Revolutions have been in progress in Hayti for a year past, and the insurgents, though overcome by the government, of which Gen. Legitime has succeeded in making himself the presidential head, it is still troubled. The American steamer Haytian Republic transported arms and munitions of war for their use, there is little doubt of that, and Gen. Legitimecanused her to be seized and has refused the demand of the United States for her release. Our government assumes that the vessel was not in the service of the insurgents, but carried munitions and arms in the ordinary way of trade for her owners, and has demanded international law, although the captain of the Haytian Republic probably knew perfectly well for what use he was intended. To have tamely submitted at once to our demand would have involved loss of prestige, for, nowless I get a change of venue I guess I shall have to swing." He spoke of it but little to Sophy, for the sentence was simply six months in jail.

There was a row in Waterville at the Hanes house that came very near having serious ending. It seems that one J. R. Youngkin, who is in the employ of the Minneapolis & St. Louis railway as a thinker of speed re-

The Greedy Savages.

"Yes," said the Indian commissioner, sadly, "they are very dissatisfied indeed. I went to the reservation myself to see if something could not be done to prevent the Indians from starving to death. I established two additional day schools and cured the Indians taught tossing and instructed in the use of the globes, hoping by this means to reduce their impulses of education to divert their minds from gross acts of earthly appetite, but thy seem to take little interest in such things and continued to die right along. I've come to the conclusion I will be compelled to give them something to eat before it can be stopped. I have come to this sad result from the military administration. I think the army and religion have taught the Indians to eat and it is impossible for the civil administration to break them of the habit. I'll tell you, commissioner leaned his head upon his hand and sighed with the air of a man who has met with a serious and weighty problem, laid upon him by the folly of the army.

MINNESOTA IN BRIEF.

Bob's Mother-in-Law.

Necessary evils are wise provisions of nature; they regulate terrestrial affairs, and the more the missionary favors them, the more clearly is demonstrated the necessity. Were it not, for instance, for famine, for fever, for pestilence and Epidemic, our earth would soon be one so populous that single beds would have to be prohibited by law, and bachelors be compelled to compel families, to build higher; were it not—to name, to something less abstruse—for that necessary evil, the mother-in-law, there would be no Beauty at the Fair; there would be no Beauty at the seaside, and everything would be so sedate that our forefathers' and mothers' ghosts would sigh for the voluptuous indulgence of waltzes, less dances and daring imprudences in Puritan pews. There would be no low-necked bevies with golden tinsel bodices and silken bodices, and the young men more addicted to flirtation than to matrimony.

"While Hope, in some half-chapped retra is loses thoughtlessly the restless brain Her dim analogies."

Everybody would be married without the matrimonial bureaus of hawking, casting and hooking; and there would be no old bachelors, no old maids—the most necessary of all the necessary evils in the fair scheme of terrestrial affairs—benedicts, matrimonial failures—because no one starts out with starching.

But all mothers-in-law, while necessary evils, possess a large share of virtuous and incorrigible conduct.

The pole of W. H. Cowan's wagon dropped when coming down hill near Owatonna, and wagon and all went over an embankment. Cowan was seriously hurt, having his upper jaw fractured and his left leg broken. It is thought he is injured internally.

The village council of Willmar has fixed the saloon license for next year at $800, and limiting the number of saloons to four. A license of $500 last year heven saloons took out license, while under a $200 license for 1886 we had eleven saloons.

The members of John Ball post, G. A. R. of Winona, gave a very pleasant benefit entertainment for the benefit of Mr. Hale, one of their number, who was injured at the time of the Republican ratification here by the premature discharge of a cannon. Mr. Hale is a much respected member, and the affair proved a financial and social success. A feature of the evening was the bidding off of baskets for the refreshments.

Luverne suffered from a disastrous fire. The buildings were occupied as follows: H. F. Kingsley, dry goods, books and stationery, loss about $3,000, partially insured; J. H. Doble, cigars and tobacco, nearly all the stock of goods saved, insured for $1,000; H. Graff, ready-made clothing, about two-thirds saved, insured for $2,000; building total loss.

At a special meeting of the county commissioners of Waseca county, the bondsmen of ex-Treasurer Charles McKenna met to adjust the claims of the county against them. It is reported by several prominent citizens that this meeting was ostensibly for compromising with the bondsmen. The bondsmen are responsible for about $7,000, and the public sentiment is that they shall make it good.

The nominations sent to the senate include that of Joseph Kronenberg, Jr., who was nominated for register of the land office at Taylor's Falls, Minn., in place of Lucas K. Stanard, whose term has expired. Mr. Kronenberg comes from Sandstone, Pine county, Minn., and is backed by Hon. Dan Lockwood of Buffalo, N. Y.; John F. Stone of Pine City, Minn., Edward Jackson, chairman of the county committee; James Hurley, clerk of the courts; J. D. Markham of Pine City and Congressman Edmund Rice. The pay of the office is $1,618 per annum.

Thomas Brown, the man who shot Policeman Poull at Moorhead, is in jail, although it is not generally known. Upon being taken back from Minneapolis another attempt was made by the Moorhead people to lynch him, and he was sent down under a safe keeping. A constant watch is kept over him and he is allowed few privileges in the way he was intended. The Prohibitionists gained about 1,000 votes. Randyson is the banner county of this district, and gave Hall 2,688 votes to 627 for MacDonald.

Irregular Ballots.

The votes of Republican candidates for various candidates were thrown out owing to mistakes in printing ballots, or mistakes by the officers in making the returns. Thus Hamilton Hall 124 in McLeod county, the name being printed Thompson. Hans Mattson figured as Hugh Mattson in Nobles county, and lost 280 votes in consequence. Senate to the number of 643 voted for David Stork, Democratic candidate for Lieutenant governor. John Broderhoff, one of the Prohibition speakers, lost almost all his votes, as his initials were wrong in almost every case. None of these mistakes, however, would have changed any result.

The Girl Circled.

He was middle-aged and grey haired, with gold-rimmed spectacles, and a benignant forehead, and, says the Chicago Journal, he would be worth a million dollars if he could sell his cosmetics by the elite of the South side. Well, he sat in a cable car and looked as if he might have stepped out of one of his own show cases.

Presently they caught a big diamond on the outer side of the right knee of his pants. It was so very short it was hard work for his gloved fingers to get it free. Then they saw a pretty operator who works in the rooms of a sewing machine company.

Her eyes twinkled as she saw the gentleman succeed in his efforts to capture the jewel, and, as they proved to lengthen in pulling, he began to wind it around his finger. He thought he had hold of a simple hearing. She knew that upon that slight thread hung the integrity of his new pants. An expression of mild wonder overspread the face of the intellectual gentleman as the length continued to come at his gentle pull. He bent his head sighted even nearer to discover the cause of the trouble. Apparently he found it, for a look of horror overspread his fair face. He clutched the skirts of his overcoat tightly about him, hurried off the car, and, probably, limped into a store for shop. And when that pretty little sewing machine operator got off at Thirty-third street she was still dimpling with suppressed laughter.

A Florida River.

The Sopy-chopy is certainly one of the wildest, most gloomy streams that I have ever visited. It is of great depth in proportion to its width and winds and twists about in a most perplexing manner. A few miles above the canal the banks were scarcely thirty yards apart and the trees in places actually met overhead in an arch. In some such place as this would be the ideal spot for a waylay. Here one would be safe from observation, and could pick off his victim at short range. Here Dante's imaginations of a terrible river might be carried into reality. Here first sight of the dismal surface, like

The finest Christmas present we have yet heard of was given by C. N. Parker, of the Northern Pacific foundry, to his son Fred and family, it being the elegant brick residence, where they new reside, at the corner of Ninth and Grove streets. The present was a complete surprise to Fred, but none the less acceptable.

Miraculous Escape.

What might have been a very serious accident happened on Christmas afternoon. James Kelleher engaged a livery rig at Gergen & Moore's and his family went out for a ride in the afternoon. In the carriage was a couple of young ladies, Miss Betsy Anderson and Delia Bannon and Mrs. James Frost. The young man who was driving had stopped at Mr. Kelleher's, residence and Mrs. Kelleher and Mrs. Frost had just stepped out of the carriage when the horses became frightened and started on a run up Sixth street, knocking the driver down. On the back seat were the two young ladies who were unable to get control of the lines, and as the horses dashed down the street toward the railroad track they expected every minute to be thrown out. When the team came onto Front street the hind wheels struck the electric light pole in front of the Y. M. C. A. building and demolished the carriage, the young ladies being thrown through the door onto the sidewalk, but luckily did not receive any serious injures, with the exceptions of a sprained ankle which Miss Anderson sustained. The horses continued in their mad flight across the track into the Second ward where they were stopped. The carriage, which by the way was a new one, is a total wreck. Taking it all into consideration it was a very lucky accident, as there was no one who saw the occurrence but who expected that the ladies would be killed or seriously hurt.

Held for Horse Stealing.

The preliminary examination of Fred Kirtland, for grand larceny, took place in the municipal court yesterday afternoon, and resulted in holding him to the grand jury in the sum of $300.

It will be remembered that on the 20th of last July a horse was stolen from J. W. Porter's barn on his farm in the town of Crow Wing. The horse was one which Mr. Porter had kept for a man named Varney and was to be sold the day following at sheriff's sale for his keeping, which had been of two years duration. That night the horse disappeared and Mr. Kirtland disappeared also, and did not return to Brainerd until the Tuesday previous to election. At the examination Mr. Kirtland testified that he came to Brainerd on the 20th and walked to Gull River where he boarded a freight train and went to Fargo, and that he had no connection with the stealing of the horse. He told a straight story but had no witnesses to prove his statements. On the other side the prosecution had the testimony of Clarence Thompson, a lad of twelve years, who claimed to have seen a man answering Kirtland's description at Medley on the 21st of July, and that the man asked him the way to Verndale. He also described the horse that the man was riding which tallied with the one in question, and when asked if the man he saw on that day was in the room he said he was, and pointed to Kirtland.

The testimony of the boy was instrumental, in a great measure, in holding the defendant. Mr. Varney, who originally owned the animal, is in Washington Territory.

The presentation speech was made by Mr. O'Toole, in his characteristic and pleasing manner, which was responded to by Father Watry, who was somewhat surprised, but none the less pleased, at receiving such a substantial gift.

Wants it Proved.

At the coming legislature an effort will be made to secure legislation providing for the submission of a prohibitory amendment to the voters of the state. If the people who are interesting themselves in this matter will but examine the experience of states which have tried it, that such an amendment would have the desired effect, or that any good would result therefrom, they would confer a great favor upon those who are in the dark, and consequently unable to use the wisdom of such action.—Detroit Record.
