LIFE SAVED

By the Persistent Use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"I was troubled for years with a sore on my knee, which several physicians, who treated me, called a cancer, assuring me that nothing could be done to save my life. As a last resort, I was induced to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after taking a number of bottles, the sore began to disappear and my general health improve. I persisted in this treatment, until the sore was entirely healed. Since then, I use Ayer's Sarsaparilla occasionally as a tonic and blood-purifier, and, indeed, it seems as though I could not keep house without it."—Mrs. S. A. Fields, Bloomfield, Ia.

CLOSTERMAN & BLANDY

ST. PAUL is now a republican city, having elected a republican mayor there on Tuesday by 3,500 plurality.

THE Duluth Herald comes out strong for W. E. Lee for governor, and appears to think St. Louis county will give him the delegation.

THE wisest criminal of the age, H. H. Holmes, was hanged at Philadelphia yesterday. His nerve did not forsake him and he died with a protest on his lips.

THE Anoka Union is unsuccessful in getting Bro. Hendricks tangled in the gubernatorial mess. The Sauk Center editor and statesman is apparently able to paddle his own canoe.

THE Sixth Minnesota district has a member in congress who would rather stay in Washington and work than adjourn and enjoy the summer in a cool and quiet way. Three cheers for few and Mr. Towne is one of them.

LITTLE FALLS is one of the Minnesota cities which possess peculiar people and who arrange matters in which they control to suit themselves regardless of policy or expense. The city council, recently elected in that city on an economical platform, at their last meeting awarded the city printing to the Herald, although the bid of that paper was several times higher than the bid of the Transcript or Democrat. The Herald supported the present administration in their election, the platform being to reduce expenses, and it seems that the council appreciated the action, but what will the dear people think of the summer sault taken by the gentlemen in their attitude.

A Word Would Stop It.

In the Sixth district, Congressman C. A. Towne, of Duluth, will probably be the nominee of his party. This on the assumption that he will place himself squarely on the St. Louis platform, whatever that platform may be. Nobody credits Mr. Towne with any intention of bolting and making an independent fight in case the St. Louis convention declares for gold, and it is unfortunate that the gentleman's fool friends over the district—or some of them—should place him in this false attitude before the people. A word from him would stop all such talk, and it does seem he ought to speak it without delay. If Mr. Towne stands on the St. Louis platform, his nomination will come by acclamation. If he does not, his name will not be mentioned to the convention. This is the idea of C. F. Hendryx, of Sauk Center, and it appears to strike at the matter in about the right way.—Jerry Jr., in Minneapolis Journal.

Vassar Girls and Athletics.

All Vassar girls are fond of the well equipped gymnasium, but for out of door amusements perhaps, their first choice is for a fine long tramp over the hills, rowing or skating on the neat little lake close by, or a game on the tennis court. "We like to be country girls and wear cotton dresses and go without our hats," said one fresh faced healthy student; and the statistics of the woman physician in the infirmary on the top floor, which is a complete little gem of an infirmary, bear witness to the Vassar girl's wise choice of recreative amusements. Increasing interest in athletics has been manifested the past year. Basket and bottle ball teams have been formed, and as the college is situated far away from the town, and the tennis and ball grounds are in the shelter of the Plaisance, the students are encouraged in this sort of exercise, and allowed to count it as time spent in the gymnasium.—From "A Day at Vassar," in Demorests' Magazine for may.

The Reservation Lands.

The act of congress opening the Red Lake reservation for entry provides as follows:

PROVIDED, That each settler under and in accordance with the provisions of said homestead laws shall pay to the United States for the land so taken by him the sum of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, and shall be entitled to a patent therefor only as the expiration of five years from the date of entry, according to said homestead laws, and after the full payment of said one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre therefor, and due proof of occupancy for said period of five years, and any conveyance of said lands so taken as a homestead, or any contract touching the same prior to the date of final entry, shall be null and void.

PROVIDED, That any person who has not heretofore had the benefit of the homestead or preemption law, and who has failed from any cause to perfect the title to a tract of land heretofore entered by him under either of said laws may make a second homestead entry under the provisions of this act.

About Catching Fish.

The following points regarding fishing may keep some one from violating the law, through ignorance, and save them a fine:

The game and fish law, as amended 1895, makes it unlawful to catch or have in possession any brook trout except during the months of May, June, July and August. And other food fish must not be caught or had in possession during the months of March and April. Penalty for violation of above, a fine not less than $5 nor more than $25, or imprisonment in the county jail for each and every fish caught or had in possession. Penalty for catching fish in any other manner than with hook and line, a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $100 and costs of prosecution, or imprisonment in the county jail. "A reward of $10 will be paid the person furnishing the evidence to convict anyone of a violation of the fish law.

Safety Only In Sound Money.

"The Democrats," says Mr. Harrity, "cannot temporize with a question of the finances. They must declare for sound money, and there is not the slightest doubt that their plank in the national platform will be sound and explicit." They must declare, as did the last national convention, that "the dollar unit of both metals must be of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value." That covers the question. It is the Democratic position. In every national election since 1872 the Democrats have won on a sound money platform. They have lost when compromising with fiat money or the silver dollar. "In the name of everything that is honest and honest politic," asks the New York World, "how can the Democratic party now do anything except make its platform clear and explicit for sound money?" With a silver plank pledging the party to free coinage, or what would be more detestable, an evasive platform, read one way in one section and another way in another, no matter who was nominated, overwhelming defeat would be certain and sure, and it would be defeat with little hope of resurrection, as it would involve lasting division of the party.—Pittsburg Post.

Beneficiaries of Cheap Money.

Every period of the depreciation of the monetary unit has at once sent prices up, the prices of the merchant, who gets the news quickly, before those of the farmer, who gets the news more slowly, and a long time before the wages of the laborer who cannot afford to hold his labor out of market till he gets a proportionate increase for it. Fixed incomes remain the same, and the rise of prices inflicts great suffering on their recipients. Wages remain the same for a time and rise slowly, and in the meantime the laborers complain that prices have gone up so that they cannot afford to buy enough food and clothing. The farmer gets two prices for all he sells and pays two prices for all he buys and is no better off than he was before the change. The beneficiaries are debtors on obligations which were made in cheap, and those are not a very large class—many of them are also creditors and lose out of one pocket while gaining into the other—and the speculators, some of whom always make a profit in panics and times and periods of sudden changes of values out of the losses of others.—New York Journal of Commerce.

People who wish to go to Buffalo to attend the N. E. A. convention, who want fast time, the most excellent train service and superior accommodations, will do well to consider the Nickel Plate road before purchasing tickets. A fare of $12 for the round trip will apply with $2.00 added for membership fee. Tickets will be on sale July 5th and 6th with liberal return limit and with privileges of side trip tickets to Chautauqua Lake and Niagara Falls and return without additional cost. Additional information cheerfully given on application J. Y. Calahan, Gen'l Agent, 111 Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

Bad Cooking

Is a waste, and harmful in every way. Thousands of people are deprived of half the actual nutriment of their food because of bad cooking and the want of means to make food palatable and digestible. The

Majestic Steel Range

Is recognized as the most perfect cooking apparatus yet produced. It is made of malleable iron and cold-rolled, double-stretched steel-plate throughout, except fire-box, which is made of the best gray iron. The oven and fire-box are built on an entirely new principle.

The Majestic Steel Range is no experiment; it took 30 years to perfect it.

Frankly, it must be held to be a freak of sarcasm in nature that the owners of wild or poisonous plants are usually not those who fall victims to them.

It is believed that when Dr. Jane son beat Lobengula's forces the natives hid their arms, now to bring them out.

Paderewski's touch is extravagantly praised, but it is to be compared with that of the prince of Wales, who succeeded in borrowing $7,000,000 from the late Baron Hirsch.

A German journalist has invented an electric whip for the purpose of training wild animals. The sting of the new whip is said to be very effective.

It is reported that the petrified remain of a whale, 80 feet in length, have been found in the hills north of Lompoc, a dozen miles or so from the sea in Santa Barabara county, California.

Emperor William will not visit Cowes this year; but his new yacht Meteor will make his flag conspicuous in British waters. The German Kaiser is trying to take a share of the Prince of Wales' sporting honors.

Mr. Gladstone has been forbidden to make any more public speeches this year. The distinguished statesman will probably rest by writing twelve hours a day and chopping trees at intervals by way of exercise.

A sham election in Cuba has never troubled the Spaniards, but when they find themselves tricked in Manila they begin to be order on the subject of liberty. A taste of the Cuban oppression will, we hardly have been other than sincere.

It is estimated that New York city during business hours, a population of 3,400,000, the railways and ferries alone bringing to town over 300,000 passengers. The cities in New whom Manhattan Island will be only the nucleus of the city.

The Yellowstone commission is proceeding in a very deliberate way, and will probably not be able to make a report before next December; time is conservative. It will be well if England is carefully pursuing a policy of inactivity in the case, and so there is no reason for haste on our part.

A devil fish, measuring 15 1-2 feet from the tip of one of his eight arms to the tip of another and 10 feet from the top of his head to the tip of his longest arm, was killed in the channel at Santa Barbara, Cal., by two men a few days ago. It was not the largest devil fish ever caught in those waters.

The Russian thistle has dropped out of public notice since congress refused to make an appropriation to keep it from annihilating the agriculture of the country. But the state of Kansas, on which Massachusetts has spent $525,000, threatens to devour the state unless $200,000 is appropriated to keep it down during the session of 1899.

It is proposed to send 40,000 unmarried women from Eastern Canada to British Columbia for the purpose of supplying the demand for wives. The same thing was once done by France. It will be remembered, for the benefit of the preponderant bachelors of Eastern Canada, and the results were entirely satisfactory.

The "Human Leopards" in the Sierra Leone, in spite of the recent trial, are still busy. In the Imperi district, Sherbro, the crime of murder still continues frequent. The so-called human leopards, or men dressed in leopard skins, attack solitary individuals and murder them for some special purpose.

There are something like 20,000 actors and actresses in England; but only 1,250 have thought proper to join the National Association founded two years ago. Moreover, Mr. Charles Cruikshanks, the secretary, has just deprecated that the financial condition of the society was not as good as might be wished.

Here and there in Scotland and England are old ruins and houses with window panes which have been written upon in idle or fanciful moments by celebrated people, and not very long since a small pane on which Robert Burns had inscribed a verse, and which had been brought from Dumfries, sold in a London auction room for 70 guineas.

There is no end to the making of cycles or to the ingenuity of the inventors. A quadricycle, composed of two tandem bicycles arranged side by side, has just been invented in Paris to serve as a fire engine in cases of emergency. It is worked by four men and is fitted up with the necessary hose pipes and ladders to occupy the space between the riders.

If the reports of the horrible butcheries committed by Gen. Weyler subsequno in the Havana district be confirmed it is high time for this government to interfere. The atrocities are such as have been condemned in Armenia and for which we have taken the powers of Europe so severely to task. This brutal Spaniard is a disgrace to civilization, our very doors, killing men, women and children indiscriminately. If Spain "will not at once apply the remedy this country must.

"And to think," shrilly vociferated Mrs. Alasdaire Joyce, "that the family quarrel had reached its acute stage, and I had actually struck my own son." "Brought to my feet a man worth a dozen of you! But I thought I wanted you and I bought you!" I simply bought you!"

"And are right, my dear!" retorted Alasdaire, pale with wrath. "You paid your money and took your Joyce."—Chicago Tribune.

THE INDIANS' COUNCIL.

Verdicts of Supreme and Vital Importance Arrived at in These Famous Gatherings.

Many Lessons Taught to the White Man.

Hon. Louis Nelson, Judge of Probate, Gains Knowledge From the Indian That is Invaluable.

ALL sufferers, no matter the cause of their illness, are the people who appreciate the value of health, and realize that good health is never realized until it has departed. How to begin it and how to keep it is a matter that should be of the greatest interest to every living man and woman. The Indian before he decided any matter of vital or grave importance called a council and the subject was discussed from all sides, just as with matters pertaining to their health, the most extreme care was exercised as to their treatment, and the result is seen in the Indian's long life and general health. Many of the pale faced brothers have turned to him for his medicines, and have proved the day that they allowed themselves to be advised by the Indians. The Mohegan Indian Remedies, which are identically the same as they have been for centuries past made by the Indians from roots, barks and herbs, are the most wonderful and efficient remedies now known to the civilized world. We take pleasure in giving to the public a letter from Judge Nelson, who writes us as follows:

A Brother's Devotion

And of all this that he had spoken to his neice, to Stanley Claremont the Baronet had written not a word, and so that gentleman was supposed to know nothing of his uncle's matrimonial intentions, and to be perfectly ignorant of the destination, which Sir Loghlen had marked out for his fortune.

But it was not, as we have already seen, as all with Stanley as both Sir Loghlen and his advocate believed; for practiced quick-sighted and preserving by his interests, this gentleman had penetrated almost to the very depths of a mystery which had dishonored the Baronet's past life.

On reaching home Stanley, Sydney at once placed the box, of which, indeed, he had the only duplicate key, in a small cupboard, which he locked, placing the key with that of the other in his self, which from the first he had carried within his pocketbook.

A slaughter lamb he had Sir Loghlen at once taken to his stranger-guest; appeared, indeed, to be charmed with his speech and manner; while Sydney's frankness and artless affect unmistakably signified to the baronet.

Stanley Claremont would, however, more drive planning in California for private conversation with the baronet's nephew.

Should Sydney be led to speak of his early days, a chance would, indeed, had for years been very eager to discover.

Sir Loghlen, convalescent when his nephew and niece returned to him, from a milder northern climate, was still to suffering a relapse when the fatal tidings concerning his old servant were brought to him.

But he bore up bravely. The crushing calamity of his wife's death had somewhat steeled his heart to after affliction; for, indeed, he came with the blow, all others could but fall with comparative lightness.

It was on the third day after the return of Frances and Stanley to their uncle's residence, some few miles west of Wexford, that Frances, looking from one of the windows, uttered a joyful exclamation that Sir Loghlen, seated by the fire in deep thought, was roused by, led by her to look out on the reverie into which he had fallen.

"Why, Stanley Claremont bounded from the chair in which he had been sitting opposite the baronet, and hurried to the window from which Frances was still gazing, her face and neck reversed deeply flushed, and her joyful expression increasing the brilliancy of her large dark eyes and the luxuriant lustrous eyes.

"I have known Frances, and her cousin had been prepared for that which he beheld on looking from the window.

He saw Sydney Drummond seated on a car which was jogging down the avenue toward the house, and with difficulty suppressed the execration which had risen to his lips.

"It is the gentleman of whom I have already spoken to you, uncle," said Frances hurriedly, and with much confusion of manner.

"I am glad of it, darling," was the baronet response.

Frances, in a great flutter, yet believing that she was acting calmly and with becoming dignity, rose and left and instructed the servant who answered it that the gentleman who had just arrived was to be received with every respect and conducted immediately to her cousin's presence.

And presently Sydney Drummond entered the room, and with him lighted by the strap which was around it the small, well secured box which for days he have already mentioned as containing certain important documents and a rather large sum of money.

Coldly and haughtily bowed the baronet's nephew to Sydney entered the room; while Frances, her eyes cast down as if she were examining and admiring the carpet, timidly extended her hand to her agreeable companion of the Dreadnought.

And Frances, glad so to relieve the young man's embarrassment, and perhaps discovering that she was not herself at ease, said Sydney turning to Uncle, who had already risen to receive him.

Sir Loghlen, while his niece was going through the form of introduction, started slightly, and, drawing back a step, fixed his eyes steadily for a moment or two on Sydney's face, his own countenance at the time wearing a very puzzled expression.

While Stanley Claremont, on his part, was keenly and darkly watching the baronet.

At length, as if recalled to that which was required of him, Sir Loghlen hastily recovered the step which just before he had taken, and accepting Sydney's hand, welcomed him warmly, and earnestly thanked him for the attention which he had shown on board the boat, he had bestowed on Frances.

Sydney bowed and murmured some almost inarticulate words; and felt how little he merited the baronet's grattitude, since all his attentions to Frances had arised from most selfish and interested motives.

On learning that the banker's clerk had still a corpse on board the car he at his own disposal, the baronet entreated that the young gentleman would remain for that period become intimate.

Sydney resisted the invitation but feebly, in spite of all his reasonings with himself as to the heavy penalty which he would have to pay for a few days' pleasure.

"That is well, darling!" said Sir Loghlen; "only, as you are pretty sure to do something of yourself when speaking in Mr. Drummond of our proposed journey to London—"

"And I not?" hastily and confusedly interrupted Frances, as she rose hurriedly and, proceeding no further, threw her arms around her uncle's neck, as if to hide her confusion; but entirely urged thereto, we fear, by her affectation for the baronet. Frances is to be suspect, with the hope to conceal from Sydney and her uncle her new pale fully-glowing cheeks.

And Sydney was stammering again, and worse than ever.

"He had considered," he said; "and, on reflection, you—certainly had accepted, and gladly, Sir Loghlen's generous invitation, and would, for the present, become that gentleman's guest."

With difficulty was Stanley Claremont able to conceal his vexation, which was indeed great and bitter.

"You should not detain Mr. Drummond from his business, uncle," said Frances, hastily recalled to a banker's clerk, and has, perhaps, exacting employers; and, no doubt, Mr. Drummond would find it inconvenient to be suddenly deprived of his situation."

Sydney turned sharply toward the speaker, and encountered Frances Claremont's eyes, which were fixed on him with an imploring look.

"You have made a very offensive observation, Stanley," said the baronet; "although I know, and, indeed I perceive, without intending it."

"If, indeed, there was any impropriety in the remark which I—"

"Enough," interposed Sir Loghlen; "and learn to mend your speech and manner, neither of which, of late, has pleased me."

"If Mr. Drummond has taken offence, uncle," began Frances.

"Silence, sir, I command you!" cried the baronet, loudly and very angrily, Claremont having begun to advance toward Sydney, who returned it with a scowl of the deepest contempt.

Sydney's portmanteau, and the coffer, whose contents he had explained by Sir Loghlen, were carried by the servants to the bed room which had been assigned to the new guest, who himself speedily followed, in order that he might dress for dinner.

On reaching his chamber, Sydney at once placed the box, of which, indeed, he had the only duplicate key, in a small cupboard, which he locked, placing the key with that of the other in his self, which from the first he had carried within his pocketbook.

A slaughter lamb he had Sir Loghlen at once taken to his stranger-guest; appeared, indeed, to be charmed with his speech and manner; while Sydney's frankness and artless affect unmistakably signified to the baronet.

Stanley Claremont would, however, more drive planning in California for private conversation with the baronet's nephew.

Should Sydney be led to speak of his early days, a chance would, indeed, had for years been very eager to discover.

Sir Loghlen, convalescent when his nephew and niece returned to him, from a milder northern climate, was still to suffering a relapse when the fatal tidings concerning his old servant were brought to him.

But he bore up bravely. The crushing calamity of his wife's death had somewhat steeled his heart to after affliction; for, indeed, he came with the blow, all others could but fall with comparative lightness.

It was on the third day after the return of Frances and Stanley to their uncle's residence, some few miles west of Wexford, that Frances, looking from one of the windows, uttered a joyful exclamation that Sir Loghlen, seated by the fire in deep thought, was roused by, led by her to look out on the reverie into which he had fallen.

Why, Stanley Claremont bounded from the chair in which he had been sitting opposite the baronet, and hurried to the window from which Frances was still gazing, her face and neck reversed deeply flushed, and her joyful expression increasing the brilliancy of her large dark eyes and the luxuriant lustrous eyes.

"I have known Frances, and her cousin had been prepared for that which he beheld on looking from the window.

He saw Sydney Drummond seated on a car which was jogging down the avenue toward the house, and with difficulty suppressed the execration which had risen to his lips.

"It is the gentleman of whom I have already spoken to you, uncle," said Frances hurriedly, and with much confusion of manner.

"I am glad of it, darling," was the baronet response.

Frances, in a great flutter, yet believing that she was acting calmly and with becoming dignity, rose and left and instructed the servant who answered it that the gentleman who had just arrived was to be received with every respect and conducted immediately to her cousin's presence.

And presently Sydney Drummond entered the room, and with him lighted by the strap which was around it the small, well secured box which for days he have already mentioned as containing certain important documents and a rather large sum of money.

Coldly and haughtily bowed the baronet's nephew to Sydney entered the room; while Frances, her eyes cast down as if she were examining and admiring the carpet, timidly extended her hand to her agreeable companion of the Dreadnought.

And Frances, glad so to relieve the young man's embarrassment, and perhaps discovering that she was not herself at ease, said Sydney turning to Uncle, who had already risen to receive him.

Sir Loghlen, while his niece was going through the form of introduction, started slightly, and, drawing back a step, fixed his eyes steadily for a moment or two on Sydney's face, his own countenance at the time wearing a very puzzled expression.

While Stanley Claremont, on his part, was keenly and darkly watching the baronet.

At length, as if recalled to that which was required of him, Sir Loghlen hastily recovered the step which just before he had taken, and accepting Sydney's hand, welcomed him warmly, and earnestly thanked him for the attention which he had shown on board the boat, he had bestowed on Frances.

Sydney bowed and murmured some almost inarticulate words; and felt how little he merited the baronet's grattitude, since all his attentions to Frances had arised from most selfish and interested motives.

On learning that the banker's clerk had still a corpse on board the car he at his own disposal, the baronet entreated that the young gentleman would remain for that period become intimate.

Sydney resisted the invitation but feebly, in spite of all his reasonings with himself as to the heavy penalty which he would have to pay for a few days' pleasure.

"That is well, darling!" said Sir Loghlen; "only, as you are pretty sure to do something of yourself when speaking in Mr. Drummond of our proposed journey to London—"

"And I not?" hastily and confusedly interrupted Frances, as she rose hurriedly and, proceeding no further, threw her arms around her uncle's neck, as if to hide her confusion; but entirely urged thereto, we fear, by her affectation for the baronet. Frances is to be suspect, with the hope to conceal from Sydney and her uncle her new pale fully-glowing cheeks.

And Sydney was stammering again, and worse than ever.

"He had considered," he said; "and, on reflection, you—certainly had accepted, and gladly, Sir Loghlen's generous invitation, and would, for the present, become that gentleman's guest."

With difficulty was Stanley Claremont able to conceal his vexation, which was indeed great and bitter.

"You should not detain Mr. Drummond from his business, uncle," said Frances, hastily recalled to a banker's clerk, and has, perhaps, exacting employers; and, no doubt, Mr. Drummond would find it inconvenient to be suddenly deprived of his situation."

Sydney turned sharply toward the speaker, and encountered Frances Claremont's eyes, which were fixed on him with an imploring look.

"You have made a very offensive observation, Stanley," said the baronet; "although I know, and, indeed I perceive, without intending it."

"If, indeed, there was any impropriety in the remark which I—"

"Enough," interposed Sir Loghlen; "and learn to mend your speech and manner, neither of which, of late, has pleased me."

"If Mr. Drummond has taken offence, uncle," began Frances.

"Silence, sir, I command you!" cried the baronet, loudly and very angrily, Claremont having begun to advance toward Sydney, who returned it with a scowl of the deepest contempt.

Sydney's portmanteau, and the coffer, whose contents he had explained by Sir Loghlen, were carried by the servants to the bed room which had been assigned to the new guest, who himself speedily followed, in order that he might dress for dinner.

DROWNED IN GULL LAKE.

Sad Fate of L. S. Van Wold who Lost His Life While Making a Ford Between Gull and Mud Lakes.

News was brought to thisgity Wednesday afternoon that a man had been drowned at Gull Lake, and that the body was being held until the coroner could investigate. Deputy Coroner Losey went out on Wednesday night and found the body at A. Bernard's residence, a few rods from the old Mud Lake bridge where the catastrophe occurred. John Kiley, an eye witness to the drowning said that the man was driving in front of him, and when he came to the ford, made necessary on account of the high stage of water in Gull Lake, he started across. Kiley saw he was getting off the track, and too far out into the lake and called to him but the man evidently did not hear him, and about that time the horses went into a hole in deep water. The man, whose name was L. S. Van Wold, stood up in his wagon and hung onto the reins, and the wagon box floated off from the wagon, the horses making out into the lake being frightened. Van Wold then dropped the lines and jumped into the water but could not swim very well, and Kiley stripped and plunged in after him. The horses had turned round and when they saw Kiley made for him, and he had all he could do to keep away from them, and in fact was struck twice. Van Wold had gone to the bottom and when Kiley regained the shore he was nearly exhausted. The horses were gotten out and the body afterwards recovered. On Van Wold's person was a letter addressed to Deerfield, but the water had erased the name of the person it was directed to, and he had $4.75 in silver in his pocket.

The body was left at Bernard's until yesterday afternoon, when Coroner Dean brought it to this city. The deceased lived on a claim near Sibley lake, on the S. & N. M., and leaves a wife and four children in destitute circumstance. The man's father lives at Millbank, S. D.

We are ORDERED out of the building by May 1st, and until that date will offer shoes at prices that they cannot be made for. Call and see for yourselves.

A Statement of Facts.

We notice in last week's issue of the DISPATCH an advertisement of the J. M. Elder Agency on the settlement of the fire loss on the livery barn of Messrs. Gergen & Mooers. In this article Mr. Elder states that this is the first loss ever adjusted and settled satisfactorily and in full in this city without question. This is a very flattering to the companies he represents or to the adjusters who have settled his losses for him heretofore. We are willing, indeed, to substantiate a statement that it is not true in regard to losses in Brainerd settled in at least our own agency. We are loth to believe, too, that this world have been the first loss ever settled satisfactorily by the Elder Agency, but if it is so, we sincerely hope for him a better fortune in the future.

Another stern fact in connection with the loss is that it is not even yet paid in full. The $3,000 insurance on the livery barn was placed with several companies, all of his agency, and at least one of these companies has not yet paid, and will not pay under the present adjustment. We have the statement of W. B. McCord, special adjuster of one of Mr. Elder's companies, to this effect. The entire article is misleading, and we are not willing that this advertising statement of Mr. Elder shall stand without contradiction.

O. D. Ellis, Charged With Horse Stealing.

It appears that there have been a number of horses stolen from Cottonwood county lately, and Sheriff Nees, of Windom, arrived in Little Falls, according to the Transcript, on Saturday night in search of a team that had recently disappeared. When this team was stolen, the officers of several counties were notified to be on the lookout for them. An officer of Eden Valley, Stearns county, was the first to get track of this team, but as he did not have a description of the stolen horses nor the man who had possession of them, he did not make the arrest. They were traveling through his town and he stopped them, but the fellow who had them gave good references and he was allowed to continue his journey. Later he received a description of the team and started in pursuit. He tracked them as far as the farm of Hans C. Hansen in the town of Elm Dale, where he learned that the man had made inquiries in regard to the best road to Pillager in Cass county. The Eden Valley officer and Sheriff Nees both arrived here Sunday evening, and with Sheriff Bidle started in the direction of Pillager, expecting to overtake him. They found he had gone by way of Brainerd, and learned that he had passed through there on Sunday. They followed and overhauling at his home at Pillager at 9 o'clock this morning. The man's name is O. D. Ellis, and after his arrest he acknowledged that the team came from that place, but said that he could account for his possession of the stolen horses, and could produce the man from whom he got them.

Sheriff Ness took the man back with him to Windom, going through this city on the afternoon train. The Cottonwood county sheriff is of the opinion that several stolen teams have gone up into that section, and thinks also, that a certain party who lives in that county is engaged with Ellis in this business. The owner of the stolen horses was also on the track of the animals, and was at Pillager this morning and identified them. He will return with them immediately.

We are ORDERED out of the building by May 1st, and until that date will offer shoes at prices that they cannot be made for. Call and see for yourselves.

Gone Beyond.

The people of this city were very much surprised to learn on Wednesday morning of the death of John Commess which occurred at Staples of typhoid fever on that day. The young man was up to about ten days ago employed as night clerk at the City Hotel and went home to rest for a few days not feeling well. The funeral occurred today, the remains coming buried in Evergreen cemetery, this city.

The Staples World says: John Commess, whose illness was reported last week as protracted, is nursing at the home of his parents. Services will be held in the Catholic church tomorrow at 10 a. m., and the remains taken to Brainerd for burial. The deceased was a young man of sterling character and exemplary habits, scarcely 20 years of age, and would be mourned, not only by a bereaved family, but by a large circle of friends. For he was well liked and had a host of friends wherever known, and his early death has cast a gloom over the entire community.

Lyman H. Lyons died at the Lumbermen's Hospital on Wednesday of heart failure. He was 27 years old and a son of Harrison Lyons of Verndale, to which place the remains were shipped yesterday.

Arthur Johnson, the six months old child of Mr. and Mrs. Sam. Johnson died yesterday afternoon. The funeral will be held from the house today, Rev. Travis officiating.

As to Insurance Adjustment.

BRAINERD, May 7, 1886.

EDITORS DISPATCH:—In your issue of May 1st inst., we notice an article from the pen of one of our local insurance agents in regard to the settlement of the Gergen-Mooers' loss by fire. Now, while we do not object to the agent "rushing into print" because he has had one loss "adjusted without any question," we do object to the assertion that "this is the first loss ever adjusted and settled in full in the city without question." We have not the slightest doubt but that this is the first loss that he has ever had "adjusted without question." It is doubtless because of this fact that he is so anxious to advertise it to the world. The fact is that all the other agencies of the city have had a great many losses "adjusted without any question," but they have not thought it at all necessary to tell their neighbors about it. If Mr. Elder wants to "toot his horn" he has a perfect right to do so, provided he states facts. But since the appearance of this great patent-lightning adjustment "ad," we have been "credibly informed" that the loss referred to has not been ALL adjusted without "any question." And it is now in order for this veteran underwriter to issue an extra and enlighten a waiting world upon the whys and wherefores of the "adjustment by the lightning process of losses without question."

Farewell Social.

At the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Goodman, on Sheriff street south, on Wednesday evening, May 12th. Ice cream and cake or strawberries to order. Everybody cordially invited to come.

New Clothing Firm.

The "Smith Clothing Co." is the new style of a business firm in Brainerd, Mrs. Fannie R. Smith having bought the interest of W. R. Campbell in the clothing store of Campbell & Smith and will conduct the business at the old stand. The firm above referred to is one of the oldest in the city and Mrs. Smith will undoubtedly receive the generous patronage which has always been accorded them in her new venture, as it is an establishment that will compare well with any in the northwest.

Serious Accident.

Arthur Schuls, a young man about 18 years of age and an employe at the Gooding & Nye shops, was seriously injured on Monday. In company with three other men he was carrying a heavy car sill having it on their shoulders. His three companions threw their sill before Schuls was ready and it caught him on the side of the head carrying him to the ground and causing a fracture of the skull. For a time his life was despaired of but we understand that there are hopes of his recovery now.

Got His $20 Back.

J. M. Hayes had occasion to step into Parson & Swanson's to get a check cashed on Tuesday and among the change given him was a $20 gold piece. The money was counted out on the bar and before Mr. Hayes picked it up some one spoke to him and he turned around and while he was looking the other way a man named Emil Hallin appropriated the gold piece. Mr. Hayes picked up his money but did not notice that part of it was gone until some time afterward. Hallin was subsequently arrested and put up the money and was ordered to leave town. He got off lucky.

The Pryde Petition.

To all concerned:

I have to send the Pryde petition to the governor next week. All who believe the statements contained in it should sign this week or Monday.

I cannot carry it to signers. It is forbidden also to circulate petitions in the railroad shops, and those employed who have asked to sign will please call at my office in the day or at 7 p. m.

I find some people think it asks sympathy or clemency for Pryde, but it does not. It is plain on its face and only seeks to promote what its signers believe to be best interests of the community—financial and moral.
