Warning to Farmers. As I am reliably informed that some four-mouthed cheap hirelings of competing machine firms are going around the farming country and endeavoring to sell machines by telling falsehoods in regard to the Deering Ideal Harvesters and Binders which I represent, I call attention to the same and warn the unthinking farmers of such men, who would do better as scavengers than to try and ply the machine trade with the help of lies. The Deering Ideal Mowers, Harvesters and Binders are as much superior to those competing machines as electric lights are to the old fashioned candle dips.

RECORDABLE EXPERIMENTS.

How Various Human Emotions May Be Recorded by Delicate Mechanical Devices.

Parents, teachers and lovers of children generally will be greatly interested in the results of an experimental study of no less than twenty-two thousand school boys and school girls, white and colored, just completed by the United States Bureau of Education. It has been a momentous undertaking, requiring several years, as is shown by the first detailed account of the work.

All of the youthful subjects if grouped together would equal in number the men in the ranks of our standing army at the outbreak of the rebellion. The object of the investigation was to discover the relationship between percentage surroundings, nationality, stature, weight, size and shape of head and other conditions at the combat, intellect and health of children at different ages. Almost all of the subjects were selected from the public schools of Washington, the transient population of which includes nearly all American and foreign types of childhood.

For the case of each child was issued a blank calling for as many as 107 details, covering all facts and characteristics to be considered. All these data were collected by teachers in the various schools under the direction of Dr. Arthur Macdonald, well known as an anthropologist who previously acquired cases demanding the use of instruments of precision.

Of such instruments devised entirely for measurements of man, the Bureau has one of the most elaborate and perfect in existence. They automatically measure the relative area of the nose, sensitiveness to pain and other stimuli, and the dimensions and motions of extrinsic parts of the body, besides keeping strict account of the changes in breathing and the distribution of the blood circulation under different conditions.

The extravagant theories of pseudo-scientists of the spectacular schools of phrenology must be abandoned. For conclusions reached by such thorough work as this. No attempt was made to study the bumps on the forehead, yet the general dimensions of the cranium were carefully considered. One of the most interesting deductions is that broad-headed children appear to be lighter than long-headed children, the length of the head being measured from front to back of the cranium.

In estimating whether each head was broad, medium or long a simple trigonometric formula was applied. The maximum width was always multiplied by 100 and divided by the maximum length. When the resulting numeral was 75 or less the subject was registered as long headed, and between 75 and 85 he was medium, and between 85 and 95 he was broad-headed.

Another interesting deduction is that the child with a large head is apt to be more intelligent than the one whose cranium is small. Diagrams made from the statistics show that in the circumference of the skull increase does mental ability. Children of laborers were found to have smaller heads than those who counts work with their brains rather than with their bodies.

Of all his measurements the anthropologist may be attached most importance to those taken on the head. Indeed the cranial says he are probably more significant than those of other parts of the body. A child's height or weight and his mental ability? was another question. The bright boys were found to exceed the stupid ones in standing height, sitting height and weight. A surprising discovery was that the children of the white children of non-laboring classes and the lowest average in colored children.

When blood is reduced by thought, exercises or other stimulus to flow from one part of the body to the brain or to another part Dr. Macdonald measures the extent of flow by submerging the part in question—as an arm, for instance—through an airtight rubber dam into a glass vessel of water. As the blood decreases the amount of air between the water and the rubber increases and the increase is measured by a pointer. Quite as sensitive are a score of instruments for measuring movements of muscles. One can be clasped about any muscle of the body for this purpose.

Another records the breathing, and with it it has been learned that contraction of mind causes respiration to grow less and a consequent impoverishment of the blood. Still another records the exact movements of the fingers and toes. Another measures and counts nervous tremblings and still another the sensitiveness to fatigue. Others gauge the pressure and movements of the tongue in speech or nervousness. A still more delicate device registers the exact motions of the lips in talking.

The actions of the larynx—Adam's apple—are similarly studied. To study the workings of the soft palate in

TACKLED A BIG TIGER.

LUCKY FIGHT THAT LASTED A WEEK.

Bill Dog Was Pretty Badly Wounded, and All the Money in India Caught by It Now—A Contention Between an Octopus and a Tiger.

Tigers are not so common in India now as they used to be years ago, and so when a big man eater was discovered recently in a garden in the outskirts of Jaipur, sent to a lair on which several men and women were playing tennis, there naturally was a big panic and a great scampering to place of safety.

Capt. R. G. Burton of the English army is stationed at Jaipur, and he was enjoying a siesta when one of his house servants ran in with the news that a man-eater had just entered the compound of an empty tennis court with one sweep of a monster paw. Before they could open fire upon it, the beast cleared a hedge, crossed the tennis ground to the accompaniment of a wild chorus of shrieks as the players fled in dismay and hid among the bushes in a garden adjoining the court.

The bull terrier had stuck close to the heels of the man-eater, and by barking directed the tiger to the bear's lair. Again the dog headed the tiger, but this time at some distance to itself, for it came darting out of the bushes with blood streaming from a long cut in its side that was the tiger's claw. The terrier pluckily returned to the attack, however, and as before the tiger fled from the man-eater, it was seen to enter the terrace at its heels, every man in the party opened fire upon it.

At daylight it was found that the tiger had made its escape. That it had been severely wounded was proved by a big pool of blood in the jungle where it had sought refuge. Capt. Burton determined to have the beast's skin, and accompanied only when he had just decided to abandon the chase, he was appealed to by some natives in a village about ten miles from Jaipur to rid them of a tiger that had seized and mangled a man that day. It proved to be the Jaipur tiger, which he had slain. The captain organized a party, and with the bull terrier to scent the trail, they started out to track the tiger down.

That same afternoon the terrier drove the tiger out of some thick cover in a clump of bushes and then followed into the bushes and closed with it. The hunters could hear a terrific combat going on, but could not see a thing. Presently the snarling and snapping and rushing around in the bush came to an end, and the hunters were convinced that the plucky dog had been killed.

While they were holding a council to determine how to get the tiger out where they could shoot it, the terrier crawled out into the open. The gallant fellow was covered with cuts and blood. Capt. Burton washed the blood off with water from a canteen and gave him a drink. Then before they could stop it the dog darted back into the bushes and resumed the battle.

An old Irish lady thought she would like to know what the probable expense of her funeral would be, as she desired to arrange for it and save all trouble to her heirs.

The old lady, who started, sent for Mr. Blunk (the undertaker), and said to him:

"I don't want you charge for a funeral. I don't want flowers and all these sorts of grand things, but a nice plain hearse, without any 'fin' pounds," replied the funeral director.

"Ten pounds?" exclaimed the old lady. "Oh! thank you, I'd rather walk."
