In Kandiyohi county they claim to have cats five feet two inches high with heads twenty inches in length.

The white wife of a colored man at Lake City, lately gave birth to a pair of twins, one white and the other black.

The St. Paul Dispatch has commenced the publication of another "Edina" entitled "The Gilded Dust."

It is said that the St. P. & P. cars, on the Branch Line extension, will run to Almora dria by the middle of August.

The St. Peter Tribune is enlarged to eight columns and has a new head. It presents a fine appearance and is a good paper.

One man stabbed at Detroit and another run over at Fargo and both nearly killed, figures in the costs of the celebration of the "day we celebrate."

What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. Let every county in the district follow the example of Ramsey county and double the number of their delegates.—[Princeton Union.

In the third district Hon. M. H. Dunnell seems to be certain of a re-nomination for Congress. The delegates thus far elected are pretty nearly all instructed to vote for him.—[St. Peter Tribune.

This Legislative district will at the next election choose a senator for four years and a representative for two years and it is in this people were looking about for good men for these long terms.

A mismanagement of the types last week by the printer, caused us to say that Senator Hamilton of this district voted for the acquittal of Judge Page, when we wrote it Senator Boulton.

The removal of the Detroit land office to Crookston has been countermanded and the office will remain at Detroit where it should be. "Polk for Washburn" removed the necessity for the change.

Members in good standing of the A. O. U. W. in this state are called upon this month for $2. each on account of the deaths of Major John C. Becht sheriff of Ramsey County and G. E. Johnson of Waconia Minn.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas Belcher left on Monday for the Northern Pacific country, to look at their land, and the country generally, before deciding whether to move out there or not —Superior Times.

James Lee's train of 22 teams returned from their trip to Totten, on Saturday evening; and left on Monday with 25 wagons, again loaded with the old lumber from the abandoned Fort Abercrombie, up the Red River, which has been hauled here by rail.—[Jamestown Alert.

We understand that A. DeLacy Wood has changed his plans and that instead of going to Carlton, he will start a new paper at Sauk Rapids and will also copy the Morrison County Banner. He came over on Monday and bought the sign on the old St. Cloud Press building. From which we infer that his new paper, will be called the Benton County Press.—[St. Cloud Journal.

H. W. Phelps, General Superintendent of the Athol & Springfield Railroad, of Massachusetts, of which he is the principal stock holder, was in the city this week with a view to contracting for the Wadena and Fergus Falls narrow gauge railroad, and went west on Tuesday to look over the ground. He will probably construct and operate the road, commencing operations in a short time.

A new paper—The Lake Superior News —has made its appearance in Duluth. Woodbridge & Del Plain, publishers, and "your humble servant" the editor. Relying upon "hereditary tendency and a long line of ancestral authors and writers," the editor pushes boldly his little bark into the whirling vortex of newspaperdom. A "pedigree" is a novel rudder and may work well, we shall see.

Rumors of rich gold diggings at Bear Paw Mountains, about 150 miles northeast of Ft. Benton fill the air, and the rush has already set in. This confirms the statement of General Custer, made years ago, that the Northern Pacific railroad surely through that country is "paved with gold" Fifty dollars per day to placer miners is the reported average, and yet the extension bill did not pass.

It cannot be that Dr. Stewart is blind to the objects of the Democrats in their endeavors to make a tool of him to split the republican party. If he is foolish enough to head them he will on election day find the republicans too deeply engaged in the election of Gen. Washburn and the democrats too busy in their endeavors to rake in the spoils from their little game by trying to elect a democrat to Congress for either of the two very much attention to his plaintive appeals.

If the St Paul Dispatch would run a Northern Pacific locomotive and snow plow through the cavity where its intellect ought to be and scoop out the vast accumulation of its lying and boldfaced, sycophantic slang of the "wipe off your chin" "soak your head" order, and at the same time fumigate its lying and nauseating pukey tukey style of balderdash, the native plant with care and cultivation might ever yet take root and grow to quite respectable proportions inducing its disgusted readers to return once more to their old love.

The trouble with our St. Paul friends is that the appointment of delegates to this convention had been made on the vote cast for R. B. Hayes at the very election when Dr. Stewart was a candidate and was elected; and at that election Ramsey county only cast 9,898 votes for Hayes, while the city of Minneapolis alone cast 4,080. Ramsey county, of course, had the undoubted right to poll a light vote for Hayes and a heavy one for Tilden, but is it certainly a high-handed and a revolutionary proceeding for St. Paul to demand delegates in a republican congressional convention for the votes cast by her for Ramsey Tilden.—[The Duluth Tribune.

The County Commissioners are discussing the feasibility of obtaining a building for county house purposes. Complaining mill building on Broadway together with the entire block of twelve lots on which it is situated has been offered them for the small sum of $1000. If county orders, in connection with which it is proposed that the L. S. & P. S. company donate to the county another block of twenty-four lots in another part of town are to be sold by the county and the proceeds devoted to the repair and completion of the building and to putting it in shape for occupancy. This we consider the most advantageous terms yet offered the county, and perhaps the most desirable that will ever be offered again upon which to obtain a court house.

The necessity for a building for court and office purposes is quite obvious and would effect a saving of over $400 annually to the county, which of itself is a very soon pay for a good court house, and our advice to the Board would be to accept the proposition.

L. Day & Sons, of Minneapolis contemplate leasing Mr. Bly's saw mill at this place and manufacturing the lumber in their drive, now approaching, at this point. This is a wise project and if carried into effect cannot fail to yield handsome profits. The manufacture of lumber at this point is destined to be a leading feature of Brainerd and it is only a matter of a very short time when the business will be fully developed.

Thirty or many thousands who have already settled in the great country west and tributary to this place and the Northern Pacific road, saving nothing of the millions to come, will alone create a market for all the lumber that could possibly be manufactured here with two additional mills, and faster than it can be produced.

Scarcely a day passes that a train load of lumber does not pass through this place for the market named, shipped from the N. P. Junction, Minneapolis, and even from points on the south shore of Lake Superior—Ashland, Bayfield, etc., which must entail enormous expense in freights and handling that could be saved by operators at this point. Lumber can also be manufactured here at less expense than in Minneapolis, and in addition to this, the cost of driving from this point to Minneapolis would be saved to the Brainerd mills.

Volume one number one of the Jamestown Alert is before us. Devoted to the interests of the "half-way point on the Northern Pacific railroad 93 miles west of Fargo and 101 miles east of Bismarck, and on the James river half a mile west of the junction with its tributary the Pipestem, both pure bright living streams of the coolest water, fringed with wide-spreading elms, box-elder, and wild plum groves, making with its smooth spreading valley bordered by the hills to the east and west, the most beautiful place to erect a thriving town and a pleasant home on the line of the Northern Pacific railroad, east of the Missouri river without exception." It flings its banner to the gentle zephyrs of the Dakota prairies, hoping occasionally to be borne upon their buoyant carriage to the eye and ear and attention of the outside world.

As an example at least of the daring fortitude and gallant courage of the publishers,—the Foster Brothers formerly of the Duluth Herald,—who have hermitized themselves in this secluded retreat, the effort is indeed a creditable one.

Brainerd Wheat.

Special telegram to the Pioneer Press.

BRAINERD, July 1.—Everything at present seems as favorable as could be for the wheat crop in this section. The refreshing rains of Friday and Saturday came in good time and were highly beneficial, although the recent warm weather was not of sufficient duration to cause any perceptible damage. There have been no heavy winds and but little rain previous to last Friday. No lodged or rusty wheat in this vicinity.

FARGO ITEMS.

BOSTON TRIBUNE:

Having a little leisure, I will send you a few items from this live town.

The Steamer Grandin, the fastest and finest boat on the Red River, owned by the Grandin brothers, of Grandin farm, and plying between that point and the Grandin elevator, at Fargo, pulled out last night with one barge in tow for Grand Forks under command of Capt. Timmons, a gentleman of high character and a first-class steamboatman.

A brakeman on the N. P. named Vincent, was brought into Fargo, Wednesday on the Brainerd train in an unconscious condition, and is now lying at the Sherman House in a critical condition. He undertook to pass around on the the railing outside the baggage car in the Bismarck train on Tuesday night as the train neared Bismarck, at the rate of thirty miles an hour, and when midway of the car he saw he was going to strike the pipe on the water-tank, so duck the head. Instead he jumped from the train, which he did promptly. He does not appear to have received any concussion of the brain, seems to be badly hurt in the head, though how or what the nature of the injuries is, it is difficult to determine. He has been unconscious most of the time since the accident.

Two handsome brick blocks are in course of construction here, one by the First National Bank, the other by Benn & Bechtt, of St. Paul, and Egbert & Chapin have completed the basement for a third. A school building 34x80 feet is in contemplation, and will soon be contracted, for. The Presbyterian church; the Harwood & Hamerel purpose erecting a fourth brick block this fall.

Breaking is extensively engaged in on every hand, and crops never looked better.

Another store has started at Mapleton, 6 town twelve miles west.

Considerable anxiety is entertained concerning the prospective location of the junction of the Pembina Branch with the N. P. Mapleton has the advantage of location in this contest.

Report over the retrieval of C. B. Jordan from the Fargo land office is universal particularly among the farmers, who have received many favors at his hands.

Tree claims and homesteads are being "gobbled" like hot cakes in every direction.

Yours, OCCASIONAL.

Fargo, June 28th, 1878.

ENIGMA.

I wonder if the earth grows never weary
With its eternal round?
I wonder if the million never dreary,
Or ill delight is found
In its unvarying, endless repitition
Of blossoms, fruit and snow?
Or sendless hopes, and heartless fruition.
As seasons come and go?

Does it not tire of that incessant motion
About the golden sun?
And long to sink itself in some quiet ocean,
It's toils forever done?
I am not old, and yet, sometimes, to-morrows,
As changeless seasons roll
With their monotonous round of pleasure and of sorrow.
Do pall upon my soul.

I tire of all life's labors and its duties,
I tire of gain and loss,
I tire of all the world's delights and beauties,
And yet I bear no cross.
O, Mother Earth! if thou dost keep a cheery
And brave heart in thy breast,
Teach me thine art, for I am over weary,
And sigh for endless rest.

Pops in Complete Home.

Five little noses against the pane,
Five pairs of eyes peering down the lane,
Trying to see thro' the mist and rain,
For pops is coming home.

The clock on the mantle has just struck four,
Which tells they've to wait one-half hour more
Before the table, with its rattle and roar,
Will bring their pops home.

Five little faces clean and sweet,
Five little fingers and dangling feet,
Well brushed jackets and aprons neat,
For pops is coming home.

Over the track with its lights as bright,
The long train glides in its rapid flight,
And five little mothers are watching to-night,
For pops is coming home.

The whistle sounds, the gate's swung,
The conductor and brakeman are there,
Red lips kiss and white arms cling,
For pops has come home.

DIFFICULT JOB:—For a lady to "pick up her trail" under her "circular."

The voice of the hoodle-bugle heard in the land,
The grasshopper hobbleth by,
The humble-bee sings with a tune I found boom!
And the June bug shouts; Oh, my!

Stabbing Affray at Detroit.

Special to Pioneer Press.

DETROIT, MINN., July 6th.—Ed. Naddy was stabbed by Bill Hough about 5 P. M. to-day. Still alive. Dr. Rosser thinks he may live.

A Lively Story.

A wonderful circumstance occurred in Watsonville lately. To begin with, a gentleman well known in the county died at a ripe old age. One of them a few days ago commenced laying in wood, but he, not being stimulated between two sticks of wood, far enough apart so that as fast a the eggs were laid they would drop upon the ground, at least not in danger. After laying twelve or fifteen eggs, the hen commenced her task of sitting. Now, those sticks of wood, the eggs being on the ground below, two and one-half feet. Twenty-one days and eleven of those eggs hatched successively. Will some scientist explain the phenomena.—[Watsonville (Cal.) Pajaronian.

Congressional Table.

The result in the counties in this district which have held their caucuses or conventions to elect delegates to the Congressional Convention to be held at Minneapolis on July 10th, is about as follows:

Benton	4.	Ramsey	12.

Hennepin	24.	Wilkin	1.

Total number of votes in the convention, 127.
Necessary to a choice 69.

Gen. T. L. Rosser, who arrived home on Saturday, returns somewhat disappointed by the failure of Northern Pacific appropriation, which will result in no extension of the main line being made this season. He however hopes that several important branches will be constructed during the season, and himself headed a party of surveyors who left this morning for Fargo to run a line down the Red River Valley, on the east side, to the British possessions. The party included among others Messrs. Beck, Wington, Rufus R. Rand, Louis B. Easton, Mr. Northern Pacific and Mr. Lee, of Maryland, a relative of the late Gen. R. E. Lee. The party expected to be out a month or more. The party may then survey the line from Pembina to Turtle Mountain, where it is proposed to make a connection for the Northern Pacific with the Milwaukee & St. Paul road. This will be highly advantageous to both companies. Gen. Rosser states that the board of directors of the N. P. R. R. met on the 10th of July, at which time he expects to report the result of the line of the river, will largely benefit the rich agricultural country through which it passes, and render the Northern Pacific independent of the St. Paul & Pacific, as at Minneapolis will give a connection with the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul & Minneapolis railway, a connection of the highest importance to the Northern Pacific, and one that cannot fail to largely benefit Minneapolis.—[Minneapolis Tribune.

A conversation yesterday with a gentleman largely interested in the west side of the St. Paul & Pacific railroad, elicited an item of interesting information, regarding one of the extensive land grants of the Northern Pacific railroad from Sauk Rapids to Fergus Falls, which will be of as much benefit perhaps to that will it was decided whether the Northern Pacific own the lands or the Farmers' Settlement. In other words, before its construction its road bed and franchises for the latter road were covered by the fifteen million mortgage owned by the St. Paul & Pacific, and in December next the United States courts will decide whether the Sauk Rapids people will get the land title in and take the mortgaged property out of the hands of the representatives of the United States and transfer it to third parties. This is the outline of the situation, and it will be seen that a very interesting and important point is involved.—[Pioneer Press.

I can face the foaming, retorting bourke,
I can send myself in the papers cussed,
I can hear all curses of the rebels thrust,

But I dread the fierce, fervid gleam—
The goblin image and the baleful beam—
The cunning old cruel and calamount eye

Where the Dispatch is Dissing.
A certain lady, up country says she employed a certain lawyer in St. Paul to plan a mansion for her to cause of her husband's injury while in the army. He executed her order but kind down in the statutes, (and got 'em to,) and she was foolish enough to tell some one of it. We are digging for the true interests of all, and it is in sight. Gone for a pick axe.—[St. Paul Dispatch.

Thy Curse of a Ruined woman.
Woman's Journal.
"No man will ever prosper who has the curse of a ruined woman in his home. The murderer of the lady can be tried and executed by the world's law, but the murderer of the soul is tried by heaven's law and the execution is as sure as divine justice." Aunt Betsy said this as she folded the hands of a beautiful girl, and put white flowers and green leaves about the marble cold forehead. There was a tear upon the bloodless face of the dead. The house was hushed and there was mourning, such as few know. Half glad that the mother and child were dead, the rest of the family took private the last sad office and then left the house of the haunted home! A ruined home! God the avenger! Thy curse is upon the man that is there, and the destroyer thereof.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Indians.

A Baker City, Oregon, dispatch says: A courier arrived there July 1st, from Canyon City, to ask the Governor for arms and men to protect the citizens of John Day Valley. He states fifteen citizens, scouts from Canyon City under Col. Burnham, discovered Indians near the South Forks of John Day River on the 26th. Contrary to Col. Burnham's order one of the scouts fired upon the Indians. The fire was returned. Two of the scouts, who escaped shortly after the fight began, and came in to Canyon City for reinforcements, stated their companions were surrounded by at least a hundred Indians, and it is believed would be butchered by the savages before help could reach them. The courier also states hostiles were passing into John Day valley with fifty-two, supposing to be Gen. Howard's command in pursuit.

The Oregon Savages.

A Portland dispatch says it is the belief of old residents in Eastern Oregon that all the Indians in that section are disaffected, and that they will be ready on slight provocation to take up arms against the whites. Even the Warm Spring Indians, who have heretofore been strong friends of the government, and who have on several occasions rendered efficient service against the murderous tribes of Snake river, refuse to join their forces against the Bannocks, and it is thought that a large party of them will join the hostiles. It begins to look as if the Indians intend to do their worst this summer.

Arrest of Ku Klux.

A Sioux City dispatch says the latest from the front indicates that probably the savages will leave Rocky Canyon and go in the direction Columbia river through the Yokima valley in Washington Territory and passing along to the Spokane county and to Montana. They will not make a fight on the opposition on this route there being no troops and but few volunteers to meet, except of the latter, scouts might be sent out to meet and turn Walla Walla. If they take the route here indicated they will pass through a fine stock country and will doubtless add depredations with a probability of murdering many settlers.

Removal of Army Headquarters.

A positive order has been received from the secretary of war directing the removal of the army headquarters from St. Paul to Fort Snelling by July 1st. At all events, said the order, no rent will be paid by the government after that date. This order is issued under the law requiring army headquarters to be at military posts, and it embraces Gen. Hancock's department of the Atlantic, and removes him from New York city to Governor's Island in the harbor. Louisville headquarters go to Newport barracks, Omaha to Omaha barracks, etc.

The Comanche Indians.

A Galveston News special from Fort Lilli, Indian territory says: Deputy U. S. Marshall, Sexton, of Fort Smith, arrived at Fort Sill after two Indians who were confined with a number of others on the Indian farm, three miles from there. The Indians, hearing his object, sent a scout and called the Indians to shut and Posse with pistols and bowie knives. Quite a lively fight ensued, during which two of the Indians were killed. The rest fled the affair may cause the Comanches to go on the war path.

Treatment of Indians.

Secretary Schurz, in instructions to the commissioners appointed to confer with Red Cloud and Spotted Tail, says, in case the Indians differ with them as to the choice of location, they must bear in mind that it is most important to maintain perfect faith with the Indians in the performance of all promises heretofore made, and that this will be the invariable rule of the government in its treatment of all Indian tribes.

Murder in a Whisky Den.

The dead body of a man named Seymour was found in St. Louis at four o'clock on the morning of the 30th inst. in the rear of a saloon on Morgan with a deep cut in the side. A trail of blood was discovered leading to a low whisky den, nearly 500 feet from where the body was found, but no clue to the murderer.

Iowa Crops.

The Dubuque Times says: Wheat east of the Cedar valley, will be damaged about 10 to 15 per cent.; west of the valley, it will be full average crop. Corn, except in some spots, has a good stand and strong root, and promises an average yield. Oats, barley and rye are usually heavy. Wherever flax is grown the crop is excellent.

Appointments.

The President has appointed Maximilian F. Bonesan colner of the mint at New Orleans; Albert L. Ashcroft, assistant United Weeks melter and refiner; John C. White, Illinois, secretary of legation of the United States to Brazil; Thos. Heim, Kansas, register of the land office at Kerwin, Kansas.

Sporting Coppers.

Four hundred of the six hundred coopers in Chicago went on a strike on the 30th inst., for an advance of wages. The rates fixed last February and prevailing since then is 30 cents per barrel. The coopers claim to have voted to assist them in their strike.

He said to Cowgill and McLin that all he wanted of them was to do their duty honestly and fairly, and said to them if the State of Florida did honestly cast its vote for Tilden, it was their duty to declare it. He never made one of those a promise, or heed outinducement for them to declare the State for Hayes. In Nov. and Dec. several letters written to him by McLin, which caused much surprise to him. The committee room. Gen. Lew. Wallace and others were examined without particular results. The sub-committee, Messrs. Reed and Hiscock, returned from New Orleans, and will commence to take testimony on Monday, July 2d.

was instructed Governor Jan. 8th. In my opinion Louisiana as good as Mr. Hayes' title to the Presidency. I consider Louisiana as much one as the other. I received the Louisiana returns on the 7th inst. The legislature, from which Mr. Hayes enjoy his title, I was aware I am not entitled to a seat. I am entitled to be Governor. Counting out Mr. Hayes this rests on the vote of Louisiana. I am entitled to be Governor. Counting out Mr. Hayes this rests on the vote of Louisiana. I am entitled to be Governor. Counting out fraudulent returns that declared my election elected Mr. Kellogg? I do not. Mr. Hayes is not entitled to recognition that as a lawful legislature. Gov. Packard was in the city of Washington on the 4th inst. L. D. Dennis was further examined by the committee at Washington, in regard to the Florida election.

THE CROPS.

The Splendid Outlook in Minnesota.

Albert Lea Enterprise: Wheat and oats are looking but all through the county.

Bixby (Dakota) Courier: The wheat is so heavy in the straw that much of it has been badly lodged by the late rains.

St. Cloud Journal-Press: How different everything looks in the "grasshopper district" this year from what it did last year at this time.

Madelia Times: Wheat is heading out fast now. Some has been cut some days, and we hear farmers say they expect theirs will be fit to cut in three weeks.

Anoka Sun and Republican: Farmers say that they never saw such a growth of wheat as there is this year. It stands four feet high and headed out finely.

La Sueur Sentinel: The weather has been very hot the past week, and corn has had a thrifty growth. On Monday thermometers indicated about 90 in the shade.

Wascca Leader: Farmers are rejoicing over the present propitious corn weather and are general in their remarks that other grain crops are looking finely and promising.

Sauk Centre Herald: The wheat crop all over the country never looked so well as it does this summer, and unless something happens the average will be twenty-five bushels to the acre.

Fergus Falls Advocate: The crops in this town are looking almost "too good," and are beginning to lodge considerably, but a warm sun and drying wind will bring them out all right for the harvest.

Pope County Press: In Douglas county, according to the Post, they go up in a balloon to measure the height of their crops. In this county they climb a tree to measure the length of their wheat.

Lake City Leader: "The warm—the hot —weather of the past week, has made the corn fairly yell out with growing pains. It is now something over the rate of a little less than a foot per day.

Renville Times: Fine growing weather. Small grains are making an astonishing growth. Barley is a little ahead of wheat because the bran will be thicker and harder and will 'cut up' in grinding, thus giving the flour a darker shade. The wheat should be made of medium-size and be laid by the binder either to right or left as may be, so that four or five swaths are thrown together, which will save much time in shocking.

This timely item appears in the South-ern Minnesotan: To destroy bugs on squashes and cucumber vines dissolve a tablespoonful of saltpetre in a pailful of water, put a little of this around each hill, shaping the earth so that it will not spread much, and the thing is done. The more saltpetre, if you can afford it—it is good to vegetable but death to animal life. The bugs burrow in the earth at night and fall to sleep in the morning. It is no good to kill grub in peach trees—only twice as much, say a quart to each tree. There was not a yellow or blister-bug in the valley of 60-mile trees to which it was applied last season. No danger of killing any vegetable with it—a concentrated solution is best. The bugs make them grow wonderfully.

To Tell A Fully Ripened Water-Melon.

When the melon begins to change color inside, and its seeds to turn black in a small black speck, scale, it begins to appear on the outer-rattle or rind. These are multiplied and enlarged as the fruit matures. A full crop of blisters show them thickly sown over the surface. A partial development only indicates half-ripened fruit. A full crop of blisters indicates perfect ripeness. When hundreds of melons are strewn along the side walk, you will have to look pretty sharply to find one without a spot. A satisfactory "escutcheon," to borrow a term from M. Guenon. But it is unfailing when found, and is the only sure way you may walk away with your melon with the most entire confidence. The blister is about as large as a close inspection, but is plainly visible when that is given.

Poultry Notes.

Arrange for placing chicken coops among young garden vegetables for the chicks will keep in check the insect pest.

Gapes in chickens or turkeys can be cured by mixing a teaspoonful of lard's oil and camphor—two drops of camphor mixed with three drops of oil. Open the chick's mouth and drop the mixture down its throat. Then rub oil on the outside of the neck. Red pepper mixed with the food, weekly, will keep the fowls in healthy condition.

To bring a chilled or wet chick or young turkey to renewed life, hold it over the steam from a tea kettle of hot water. The remedy will resuscitate a chick when so far gone as to appear lifeless.

Protecting Cornfields from Birds

The crow, the blackbird, and the blue-jay are the most troublesome pests to our cornfields, and this for a period of about two weeks, starting from the time the corn is up. To protect the fields against their depredations many devices are restored to, two of which at least are effectual, the rest doing little or nothing for the trouble they involve. The first is the running of a twine around the field, elivated six to eight feet from the ground on the top of fence posts every nine or ten feet, at considerable more and somewhat of expense. The other is to sow corn over the field to feed the hungry birds. It is not necessary that the corn this sowing over more than a small portion of the ground at to or three different places, at the head rows.

The cheapest plan would soon discover charitable donation, and be perfectly satisfied with the arrangement, leaving the young plants to grow. The first cheapest the remedy the time spent would be trifling, and the whole cost from a half to a number of days. It should be remembered that the crow hever eats hard corn. If found hard it is carried off, six grains or grains at a time, and dropped till it becomes soft. Therefore, the corn, before being scattered, a portion at a time, should first be well soaked. With these precautions, I think we can promise any cornfield to be free from the depredations so much complained of in certain seasons.

The Wheat Crop.

The forthcoming wheat crop will probably be the greatest ever produced in the United States. Kentucky alone will harvest in twenty-one States, viz: The six New England States, New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Kentucky, Missouri, Texas, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa and California. The aggregate product of 201,000,000 bushels, this amounts to 9,050,000 tons, and to move it would require 903,000 cars, each carrying ten tons. To drag these cars would take twenty each would require 45,150 locomotives. If these trains were spread out along the railways they would cover 11, 3076 miles of track, and they would form nearly four lines across the continent from New York to San Francisco.

The estimates of the States mentioned is as follows: Minnesota, 60,000,000; bushels Iowa, 45,000,000: Kansas, 80,000,000; Nebraska, 25,000,000; Wisconsin, 19,000,000; Michigan, $15,000,000; Illinois, 15,000,000; Indiana, 20,000,000; Texas, 12,000,000; Missouri, 10,000,000; California, 8,000,000; Tennessee, 10,000,000; Pennsylvania, New York and New England, 25,000,000. Total, 201,000,000 bushels.

Besides all this, however, is California, whose crop this year will probably reach 60,000,000 bushels. Then come sixteen other States and Territores, all of which grow more or less wheat, the product of which may be safely set down at 150,000,000 bushels. Under these circumstances the forthcoming what harvest of the United States may be set down at about 500,000,000 bushels, or 14,000,000 tons.

Hints on the Care of Health.

1. Diet. This should be pure and wholesome, and of a mixed character. It should also be moderate as to quantity and regular, and should be neither too long nor too short intervals between meals.

2. Exercise. Daily exercise is necessary to the enjoyment of health, and, if possible, should be taken where the air is pure and free from smoke and other impurities. The best kinds of exercise are walking, riding, rowing, etc. When out-door exercise is impracticable, the gymnasium may be advantageously substituted. 3. Pure air. The thorough ventilation of the house or rooms we live in is another essential to health, and must on no account be neglected. Nothing is so conducive to sickness as hot and stuffy rooms; and this remark is especially applicable to the sleeping rooms, which should be of sufficient size, permitting a free current of pure air to pass through it during the hours when it is not occupied.

And here it may not be out of place to observe that the practice of closing doors leading into passages or staircases, which may contain all the bad air of the house; neither should the sash of any window looking into confined and impure places. Ventilation, to be of service, must permit of a current of air, and not of such a way that it cannot re-enter, and of the admission of the pure air from the best source without. 4. Clothing. This should be of a comfortable cut, but much wrapping up being quite as prejudicial to health as too little. It should be adapted to the season of the year, and should always, in this country, include thick underclothing in the winter and light for the summer; the last also should be well protected by warm stockings and strong boots. The custom of placing thick layers of flannel on the chest in the form of a chest protector is very much to be deprecated, except in the case of really delicate persons. 5. The bath. This is a valuable adjunct to health, and should be taken during the summer months, and with the chill taken off the balance of the year. A warm or tepid water bath should be taken at bed time once a week or once a fortnight; or a Turkish bath once a month. For those who can indulge in the luxury, care being taken not to drive, but to walk briskly home after using the bath, it is found to be very great. 6. A balm temperament. Those who are so constituted, or who have sufficient command over themselves as to preserve this condition, have a valuable adjunct to health, as there is perhaps, nothing so prejudicial in this age of overwork, both of the head and of the heart, as the worries and anxieties of every-day life. The easy going, even-tempered man, must digest his food well, and is less affected by the daily wear and tear of life than the passionate, impetuous and impatient man, and will live longer. 7. Rest and amusement. These are essentials to health hence the proverbs, "You cannot burn the candle at both ends," "All work and no play make Jack a dull boy." The want of rest may endanger life; Jack's dullness will end in sickness.

Caring for Milk.—Every milkman in the country, put a pail of milk into your cast before straining. Then pour out of unstrained milk may spoil a whole can of sweet milk, and one sour can will certainly injure all milk or cream with which it comes in contact. In the name of decency we beg of every producer of, in particular about milking and properly straining his milk.

2. Cows containing milk should never be kept in a milking barn during the night. The scent of the stable (however well kept), will injure the milk and spoil the nice flavor which it should have. An open shed, a little distance from the barn, your woodshed, or a cool kitchen, be a good proper place for keeping milk over night.

3. Insist that your milking is done in a cleanly manner. Too much pains cannot be taken in this particular. Dirty milkers here will entail a great loss on the manufacturer and insult the consumer.

4. Do not keep milk in tainted vessels. If possible; it will keep your cows clean and the stable sweet.

5. Do not under any circumstances leave your pails and strainer at the barn over night. Please carry them to the house and have them put away clean, washed both morning and evening. Much depends on this.

6. Use only tin pails for milking.

7. Tin strainer pails are the best for straining milk. Some dairymen use strainer pails and also a cloth stretched across the can, thus straining the milk twice. We advise this double straining of milk. It costs you but little trouble, while it will prevent the loss of any of the butter and cheese made from your milk.—American Dairyman.

Sources of Personal Beauty.

A beautiful person is the natural form of a beautiful soul. The mind builds its own house. The soul is the only residence it ever has. And shapes the body to its own likeness. A vacant mind takes all the meaning out of the human face. A sensual disposition deforms the handsomest features. A cold, selfish heart shrivels and distorts the best figure. A mean, grovelling spirit is sure to let the dignity out of the figure and all the charact. out of the countenance. A cherished hatred leaves indelible and unmistakable lineaments into an image of ugliness. It is impossible to preserve good looks with a brood of wicked passions in the blood, a set of low loves tramping through the heart, and a selfish disdainful spirit sunning itself in the eyes. We never see the beauty at an elegant mansion with a litter of swine in the basement, a tribe of cripples in the parlor, and cats in the chairs in the upper part. Badness and beauty will no more keep company a great while than poison and sugar will mix well, or an elegant drawing survive the furnace fire. The experiments of putting them together has been tried for thousands of years, but with one unvarying result. There is nothing that so refines, polishes and ennobles face and countenance as the constant presence of great thoughts.

HOUSE AND FARM.

Farm and Garden Notes.

To maintain a herd of cows successfully it is necessary to have one acre of them two years old, one-sixth three, and the same number of the ages of four, five, six and seven years.

There is no reason why green pea should not be eaten during the entire summer. The majority of the people, however, who have a garden content themselves with one or two plantings of this wholesome and delicious vegetable.

Frequently we see grape trellises made wholly of wooden bars, which the vines tendrils cannot clasp or climb on. Vertical wires, eight inches apart, are neatest, and carry the weight of shoots loaded with fruit without yielding, but light rods or neat twiggy brush answer well for the vine to climb by, and such support is essential for free and perfect growth.

Some sensible writer truthfully says that "most diseases of cattle are produced by wrong treatment—too much feed at one time, too little at another; too rich at one time, too poor at another, etc." If all hogs and sheep were fed liberally, watered and used properly there would be little disease, and all ailments could be cured by simple remedies, which every man has or may have at hand

Ploughing green crops into the ground to rot is a practice long practiced by the ancient Romans, and is done in Italy and many other countries where the soil and climate are favorable. This mode of fertilizing is specially suited to warm countries where vegetation is rapid and luxurious. In the southern countries of Europe the crops of grain are usually removed in time sufficient to allow the maturity of the green plants the same season.

The best time to cut wheat, according to a Missouri farmer, is "when it is passing from the dough, or when the kernel is plump yet soft enough to mash with the hand; but when so cut it must be very carefully cured to keep it from sprouting and to make good immediately and set up in shocks very soon after. If wheat stands on the bulun until dead ripe it will shell less and is better flour because the bran will be thicker and harder and will 'cut up' in grinding, thus giving the flour a darker shade. The sheaf should be made of medium-size and be laid by the binder either to right or left as may be, so that four or five swaths are thrown together, which will save much time in shocking.

"JUST SO."

I hated Aunt Margery's parrot. Its screaming, croaking voice, its gurgling assimilation as it sat on its perch, stirred up something in me evil and vindictive. Perhaps I had no natural inclination to pets. Often when I had been over wearied at the old farm-house, the sight of mother's hens scratch-scratching to a living had irritated me with a sense of over-work. But they at least came honestly by their living. I respected them; but these pampered, over-fed thing made my flesh crawl as it clung ogling to its perch, or dropped lazily down to pick up a bit of cracker, nibbling there with an unsavory chatter. No; I did not like pets. Aunt Margery did. This ugly foreign favorite had absorbed all her affections. I thought to myself bitterly, as I watched it that morning. She caressed the creature; she spoke to it endearingly; but for her own kith and kin she had nothing but everlasting fault-finding and ceaseless exactions.

A few tears dropped down upon my hands as I sat there. "The parrot, thinking down upon me, drew up one skinny claw, scratched its emerald head, and screamed. "Just so"—a favorite phrase which served it to express the most subtle meanings, apparently, and with which to jeer at my emotion.

This was the third morning I had waited for Dick—poor Dick, lighthearted, high-spirited Dick!—who had taken up his cap and left me at the gate, to breakfast with Aunt Margery. This blow had taken the sunshine too utterly out of my life, and there, as I sat at the window, I mentally shook my fist at this gibbering thing so sheltered and favored while he was scathed and scarred. What would become of Dick? oh, what would become of Dick? The lad had always had some business in the city that set tightly upon him, coming and going at his leisure; but now for three whole days his face had not lightened the gloomy house. Not longing to know of his welfare, the yearning to see him had grown intense and intolerable. And now, considered terrible and distraught by my aunt's standard, I marveled with Aunt Margery myself—I to whom her invalid state had hitherto excused so much, who had been her patient nurse so long, and her acknowledged peace-maker between herself and the outspoken, impolite Dick. I had fallen from my high estate; I was an outcast from favor—not worth so much in Aunt Margery's eyes as this ingrate old parrot.

Well, I need sacrifice myself no longer. I was free to go away. Oh, how tasteless, how mean and degrading, seemed all that I had sacrificed to and suffered for! It could benefit Dick no more, and in his absence, dropped its splendid apparel of self-sacrifice, and revealed itself a beggarly and sordid rameness of spirit.

Outside of this narrow grocove where I had drifted and vegetated there was a thrilling, splendid reality of existence. A sort of winged feeling took possession of me as I contemplated the possibilities of the future. The parrot put up his grim claw, blinked at me from the corner of his eye, cried, "Just so!" as he flipped back into his open cage. From the window where the cage hung I could see the glowing gardens and pleasant lawns of Bellevue, and as I let my wistful hazy distance the city seemed to shadow through—the bright busy city, where every way was open to the adventurous. Dick was there, too somewhere. Dick did "business" easily and irresponsibly as a lark. Why should I not do likewise? I began to take account of stock—to make a mental estimate of myself. It is surprising, in this unpracticed carrying out my scheme, till finally the moon shone out on the last evolution; and leaving the cars I found myself about midnight scatinel poplars guarding Aunt Margery's gate with their long black shadows came outstretched.

That Little Place of Brown's.

The place was mine, and we lived as cozily there, my wife and little daughter and I, as birds in a nest, until the Blacks, next door, were lured away to the city, came to live in our neighbor hood.

We were at supper one night when my wife told me.

"They're going to take the Frick house, at the corner," said Sally, "with the big extension and conservatory, and as I happened to be walking just as the trucks came down, I couldn't help seeing a little of their furniture is of crimson satin damask and ebony—I think it's ebony, but at any rate it's inlaid."

"Well, that's a comfort, any way," said I. "If you're positive it's inlaid, Sally, you can perhaps go on with your supper."

"Yes," she said, so preoccupied with her thoughts that she scarcely heard me, "and there's the handsomest bedroom set for Jane that I most ever laid my eyes on; it's one of those dressing bureaus, Joe, with a magnificent plateglass that reaches down to the floor."

"That's good," said I. "You can run around there when your have your mare gown fitted, and see the hang of it."

"I don't expect to run around there," said Sally, craning her neck up prettily, turning up the end of her nose, and drawing her lips down.

"Why, what's the matter!" said I. "Wasn't Jane friendly? I've done many a good turn for Black in my day, and I hope they're not going to turn the cold shoulder now—"

"Oh, she was friendly enough," said Sally; "but we can't expect, Joe, that people living in that kind of style can be upon terms of intimacy with people that live as we do. There are certain restrictions in society—"

"Restrictions be hanged!" I cried. "I'm as good a man as Black any day in the week."

"You're as good as the President, for that matter," said Sally; "but it's all like a pair of scales, Joe, when one goes up another goes down. And if Jane's and my things look, it'll take a pretty heavy weight on the Black side to bring them down to our level."

I must own this kind of logic vexed me a little. I knew pretty well how Black stood socially, and how I stood. Sally there wasn't a feather's weight on his side, so far as the favors of fortune were concerned; but I felt that, since we live above his means," said I, "he can do it and take the consequences."

"He has just as good a right to live above his means," said Sally, "as you have to live beneath yours."

This was how Parthian arrow I went out door, and it rankled a little all the way down in the train, the more sharply that I found Black the center of an admiring bevy at the depot. He had quite an imposing make-up and a glib tongue, which he used in inveighing against our system of paving. He complained of the condition of a good many things in our young township, and seemed to gain popularity with every fault that he found. At last he spied me, and was exceedingly loud and effusive in his salutation.

"Hallo, Brown!" he said, shaking my hand again and again, and declaiming to the people about him. I was a old friend whom he was glad to see, he said. "I've run you down, you sly fox. That's a snug little place around the corner—very snug indeed."

I wouldn't have believed it possible I could have been such an ass as to feel flattered by this familiarity of Black's, but I found myself smirking and nodding with great complacency. Here was the head and fount of the gentry about me who lived in big houses in my neighborhood, that I had been going up and down to the city with for years, yet scarcely knew them well enough for an exchange of civilities, and here was Black already hand in glove with the best of the them. It makes me sick now when I remember that I turned my back on poor old White, and went toadying in with this aristocracy.

White lived in even a smaller house than mine, and had hard enough work to pay for that. He had failed in business some years before, and I don't know what they would have done without their little home. He was with me in the city, and I knew that a goodly portion of the lad's earnings were given over to the support of the house. It was rather hard for Bob, but he bore his lot with grave resignation. He came over pretty often to have a game of cribbage and talk over business matters with me, and I found him sharp enough at both. Then he had a pleasant way with the women. Our friend Rosalie was a little inclined to spoil the child, but Sally used to brighten up when Bob came in, till she got into that kink about the Blacks.

"You'll stay here with Rosalie, won't you, Bob, till we come back!" I said to him one day while, and as I spoke I felt Sally give a savage pinch to my arm. No sooner were we outside the door than she began about poor Bob.

"If you have no regard for your daughter's future, and choose to throw her away on a poor miserable beggar like Bob White—" began Sally.

"Why, my dear," I broke in. "Rosalie's a mere child. Don't begin to plan about her future, I beg of you. She's scarcely left off her pinafores, and if ever there was 'maiden meditation, fancy free,' there it lies in the brown eyes of our Rosalie."

By this time we had reached the imposing portal of Black's house, and were both ushered into the presence of the satin damask and ebony. Black's children were none of them grown, but were precocious enough to take the lead in conversation; and we sat for a whole mortal hour and listened to the eldest girl hammer out upon the piano what Mr. Black called a "reverie." I was glad when Black took me into his library.

But a goodly quantity of poison was infused into Sally's system and mine before we left the big luxurious house, and we went home together as changed as if touched by the rod of an enchanter.

"Dear me!" said Sally, "what a little cubby-hole this is! I declare it's quite like a lady house!"

"I'd like to have a library like Black's," said I, taking up the refrain. "It's nice to have room to swing a cat in, isn't it?"

The lad looked over at Rosalie and blushed ingenuously. The color deepened in Rosalie's cheeks till it was the shade of the crimson in Black's satin damask upholstery, and a shy gleam shot from under her eyelids that sent a flood of light into my obtuse cranium.

I began to think that Sally was right. Bob White was all very well in his way, but no sort of a match for my daughter Rosalie. She was my one ewe lamb—the bonniest, best, and dearest little girl the sun ever shown upon. And besides all this, there was the secret consciousness that she could, if she wanted to, dress "in the Blacks, some day," as Sally put it. I hadn't lived in a plain way all these years for nothing. People about me began to realize that although Brown lived in a small house, he was a man of no inconsiderable means. Black had managed to convey this intelligence to them, and I had no fault with this friendliness on his part. Old White never thought of such a thing as taking the seat beside me in the car on our way down on the train; it was generally filled by more popular patties, and I began to take quite an interest in the social and political points of discussion.

All this cost me considerable in the way of time and money. My games of cribbage were few and far between, and I put my name to all the subscriptions they chose to get up; but I had long since determined that the less Rosalie saw of young White the better. The color grew a little less vivid in her rounded cheeks, and the light less merry and chievous and joyous in her eyes, but Sarah said—I thought this was really a more suitable name for my wife's gravity and dignity—that her beauty was growing more and more refined every day. I had even lately attracted the attention of Mr. Percival Green, the junior partner of Black's firm, and Green was one of those live, active business fellows who are sure to make his mark in the world. I told my wife to spare no expense for Rosalie's advancement and happiness, but was sorry to see lack of spirit upon her part, and a quiet denial to partake of these new pleasures of popularity.

One thing is certain—radical measures must be taken to put a gulf between her and Bob White that could not be readily bridged over. The whole affair farmers was proud as Lucifer, and I knew I should have very little trouble in convincing them that the old imtimacy had better be broken off. My new house on the Boulevard began to take noble dimensions, and had already cost me a great deal of money. Its marble halls were spacious enough to chill me to the bone, and there was quite a melancholy expanse of sand and masonry in its vicinity.

It rather surprised me, when I put our snug little place in the hands of the agent, that my wife was so willing to part with the furniture too. I thought a few old time-servers might be used to advantage somewhere in the new house, and I contess to a feeling of keen disappointment when she decided every thing must go. "We don't want to set up a second-hand junk-shop on the Boulevard," said Sarah, and I was ashamed to foster these old-fashond sentiments, till one morning I found Rosalie crying over my old arm-chair in the sitting-room. It was a battling old trap, covered with a pattern of chints, where the tall of each bird-of-paradise had gradually faded with much washing. But the bulgy back seemed to have lifted itself to my weary spine, and the well-worn arms of the chair were always cordially held out to me.

"I am glad you've got a tear or two to spare, Rose," I said, "at parting with old friends. I'll never get another so lenient with my rickety bones."

"I'll never part with it father," said Rosalie. And I didn't care to tell her of our mutual decree.

In the meantime, however, I had broken the intelligence to poor Bob, as kindly as I could, that it would be better to cease his visits at the house, I think, as well as I remember, that I did put the blame upon my wife. I was glad to get it off my self, and I put it gently in a manly, practical way, and bore up under it wonderfully. I troubled me much, I remember, to take down from the maple tree beneath my window. I felt a little blue as I went in to my solitary meal, and had scarcely broken my egg when the bell rang, and I found Black at the door. His face was ashy pale, and he stood trembled upon his gold-headed cane.

"No more bad news!" I stammered out, for there was some news that I had turned out very disastrously of late.

"I'm a ruined man," said Black, sinking into a chair in the parlor door.

Big beads of terror started to my own forehead.

Green has disappeared, the scoundrel," said Black, and I'm sure I shall be accused of complicity with the defaulter."

"Naturally," I said, dryly, for I was too weak to myself to have any sympathy to spare.

"This is a confidential visit, Brown," continued Black. "I shall have to fall back upon my last little money remains in my wife, and I've come around here at her suggestion to hire this place of yours for the time being."

"My good gracious!" said a voice behind us; and there stood Sally, as red as the feathers in the duster she held in her hand.

"Yes, Mrs. Brown," said Black, "we've always been friendly, and I'm in a little place, and I really believe we shall be as happy here in our adversity as you will in your fine new house."

"Certainly," said my fine new house and every one that has'led me into this muddle!" I cried, beside myself with rage and vexation. "You know that I sha'n't have the money now to go on with. It will be all I can do to keep from the bankruptcy myself."

"God forbid that I should refuse to aid my husband in this extremity!" said Sally with great nobility of accent and manner. "We'll make the sacrifice ourselves, Joe; we'll keep our own little place; we'll go on in the old way dear. We'll be happy there, won't we?"

"I'm obliged to you for your consideration, madam," I replied. "but, when I said that I was going to go into a comfortable door. The house is let, and the furniture is sold."

"The furniture sold!" shrieked Sally. "Oh! oh! oh! oh! my furniture, my dear old furniture, taken from me! It shall not go. They can't take my things for your debts."

"Just wait," said I, "will you, till you've realized upon to pay my debts! You gave me orders for the furnishing of the sold and the house to be rented, yourself. The agent told me this morning that a party had taken them, and I closed them.

We'll have to go to town and take a furnished flat."

"A furnished flat!" echoed my wife, sinking into a chair, and covering her face with her apron—"a furnished flat!" And then there was a long silence, during which I had time and again held this way of living to be a domestic felicity, there was an unspeakable luxury in the view of now.

I wish I was dead!" she said, "I'd rather go to my grave than a furnished flat—just in the lovely spring time, when the Bahma are coming into bloom, and the strawberry bed is one mass of bloom. Oh, my poor child!" She cried, to Rosalie, who had run in and thrown herself at her mother's knee, "your Mr. Green has turned out to be a nasty deceitful fellow, and your father has been robbed us of house and home, and your father has the cruelty to talk to me of a furnished flat."

"He isn't my. Mr. Green," Rosalie broke in, "nor ever was, and the married couple won't rob you of anything but—but my affections, mamma dear."

"Am I to understand," said I, advancing to this clear blushing, weeping child, and lifting her head from my knee and cheek creeping about my fainting heart—"am I to believe that you and Bob are the married couple in question?"

Rosalie looked me in the eyes, and my wife cried out to me, with the coolest assurance, that she told me how it would be all along, and that all further opposition on my part would be useless.

"You'd better go to the train, Joe," she said; poor old Bob has been gone this ten minutes. And bring some garden seeds with you, and bring Bob to supper. We'll all live here together. And please God my darling," she said, flinging her arms about our little daughter, "we'll all be happy yet!"—Harper's Weekly.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

Simmons' Liver Regulator has been in use for many years. It was discovered before the medical profession when it has failed to effect a cure when taken by the most eminent physicians. It has stood the test of many years, during which time it has been thoroughly examined, being carefully compounded from pure vegetable drugs, with the greatest skill and care, by an experienced chemist. It takes the place of quinine and all bitter tonics, as a tonic, and as a Liver medicine it has no equal. It never disappoints or gripes. Prepared by J. H. ZEILIN & CO., Philadelphia. Price $1.00. Sold by all druggists.

As there are a number of imitations of this well known remedy, we would caution the Community to observe that our Stamp, Trade Mark, Signature and Wrapper, with our name blown in the bottle are necessary to buy genuine. Several fires from fire crackers were extinguished on the Fourth before any damage was done.

B. A. Leonard, of Jackson, Michigan, is in the city, and gave the TRIBUNE office a call this week.

The glass-ball shoot attracted a crowd and afforded sport for the participants on the afternoon of the Fourth.

M. J. Doyle, of Castleton, Ontario, brother of W. H. Doyle, conductor on the N. P., is on a visit to our city of pines.

A party of our citizens enjoyed a pleasant time on the afternoon of the Fourth, in a sort of open air concert and ball on the plateau northwest of town.

JUST RECEIVED—Another choice lot of flowers, confirmation wreaths, hosiery, notions and a large variety of plated ware. MRS. B. F. SMITH'S.

A choir of songsters containing some rich voices serenaded the city on Wednesday evening—the night before the Fourth—producing excellent music.

The Fourth never passed as quietly at Brainerd before since the year 1870 when the stately pines and the frisky chipmunk constituted the census of the city.

Judge J. R. Carey of Duluth, Clerk of the District Court of St. Louis county is in the city for a few days on official business with the Clerk of the Court of this county.

Brainerd, June 29, 1878. 32tf

At the installation of officers of Wildey Lodge No 37, I. O. O. F., of this city, on Wednesday evening last the term ending December 31, 1878, the following officers were installed: James Dewar, N. G.; A. Mahlum, V. G.; W. W. Hartley, Secretary, and P. M. Lagerquist, Treasurer.

Capt. Houghton's new steamer just completed at Aitkin (not yet named) left Aitkin on a trial and excursion trip to Pokegoma Falls on, Wednesday, with a number of our citizens on board. Mr. Joy and family, of Minneapolis, also took passage and spent their Rousin in the northern wilds.

A special train, carrying a jolly picnic party, composed chiefly of the Sabbath school scholars of the Congregational and Methodist churches ran out to Withington on the north line of Crow Wing, returning in the evening, affording a happy day for the children on and about the locality Serpent Lake.

In a letter received on Thursday from Major James Whitehead, dated Crook City, July 1st, he says he will return to Brainerd upon the delivery of a law suit with his partner Ben. M. Hazen. He says "Hazen undertook to whip me in Deadwood, the other day, but was glad to get out of the scrape, as I was too willing."

A NARROW ESCAPE—A number of boys on South Fifth street on the evening of the Fourth were carelessly playing with rifles, loading them with powder and wads and shooting them at each other, when a boy named Lingnau either carelessly or unintentionally put a ball in his rifle, at least he says he did not know it was there, and discharged it towards the little son of William Shontell. The ball fortunately did not hit the boy, though it passed through the crown of his hat and barely grazed his head.

The ladies of St. Francis' Church gave a fair and festival at Mr. Hall's on the afternoon and evening of Thursday the Fourth that was well attended and a pleasant affair the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the improvement of the Catholic Church in this city. We regret that the crowded nature of things in getting to press last week caused us to forget entirely our promise to announce the fair in these columns in our last issue but the absence of the affair notwithstanding, must be our consolation for the neglect which was purely unintentional.
